THE CORNWALL RINK—Those interested wish to correct a statement which appeared in the press recently, "that the Cornwall Rink was built by the Cornwall York Institute." This is not correct. The rink was constructed solely by the Community Club, Cornwall, which was organized a year ago to promote healthy recreation among the young people. Realizing the monotony of life in the country during the long winter season in his province, the club purchased an acre of land and erected a rink, as this was quite a financial undertaking the club would welcome any assistance from any other organization which has the welfare of our community at heart.—Signed Community Club, Cornwall.

Fans Have Two Emotions When Ruth Comes To Box NEW YORK, June 15—"Aw, put it over!"

The cry from thousands of throats, half in derision and partly as a plea. Babe Ruth is at bat. Two men are on the bases. The opposing pitcher, under orders, deliberately throws three more balls and the Babe walks. "Boo o o o!" the crowd wails and groans.

The next time Ruth comes up no one is on base. The pitcher decides to match his wits, speed and curves with the batsman. A crack like a pistol shot and the ball sails straight and true to the right field bleachers, the resting place of most of Ruth's homers.

To a man, the fans stand, yell, applaud, throw hats in the air and tell each other what a wonderful blow it was while Babe trots around the bases and the crowd follows him with their heads for the dug-out.

Denmark Rotarian Speaks on World Industry

DENVER, Colo., June 17.—"When we deal honestly internationally, we help to establish a good reputation not only for ourselves but also for our country—and we create good will" said T. C. Thomsen of Copenhagen, Denmark, at the morning session of the Rotary convention. Mr. Thomsen is a notable leader in European industry, at the head of a great cream separator machinery company which has traded throughout the world.

Mr. Thomsen also stated, "Excessive trade barriers mean stagnation and throttling of progress." He said in part: In modern life nearly all business at any rate, all big business, rests on confidence, and the great bulk of all payments is based on credit.

Thousands upon thousands of people are engaged in keeping the tremendous international trade going, and it is the moral standard of each and every one of these men and their colleagues in their respective trades, which determines as we find them today, and it is these men who shape the ethics of tomorrow.

Infidelity to contracts always follows violent fluctuations in price. It is under such circumstances that men show what they are made of. A grain broker in Vancouver told me that in 1924 wheat prices suddenly dropped 25% and he had sold millions of dollars worth of wheat to many countries, purchasers everywhere with the exception of one country tried to cancel their contracts or to wriggle out by finding fault with shipments.

I mention this to remind you that when we deal honestly internationally, we help to establish a good reputation not only for ourselves but also for our country—and we create good will. Since the war, overseas countries tend more and more to develop their own industries. Overseas markets have consequently in a great measure been lost to Europe, and in order to alleviate the abnormal unemployment following the loss of markets, many countries are introducing prohibitive customs tariffs, often pointing to the United States as the great example of the blessings of high tariffs.

In addition, strong appeals are made to national sentiment, all for the purpose of replacing imports with goods produced inside the country itself. But all these measures instead of reducing national unemployment simply cut the great arteries between the countries. The barriers set up against the free interchange of population, of goods and of skilled experience inflict still more hardship on everybody.

And just as no nation can get rich by crippling its neighbor through war, so it is daily growing more and more clear that no nation can get rich by ruling other countries economically or by surrounding itself by a "chinese wall." The world is an economic whole, and the more each country acts on to other nations, the more will each suffer in the long run. Industries will stagnate, much human energy will be wasted, and the entire standard of living will be lowered for a long time ahead.

Imagine, for example, if in the United States we placed such barriers between individual states, imagine that whenever you crossed a borderline you found a different people, a different language, a different coinage, a different religion, etc., just imagine how life would be complicated.

But this is just the position in Europe today, and there are a growing number of thinking men, who feel that the only way to save Europe from destruction is the formation of a European trade league of nations, surrounding Europe with a common custom barrier, and enclosing a sufficiently vast territory to enable the nations inside the barrier fully to utilize their powers and resources in a united effort for cheaper production and elimination of waste.

gain, litigation may be so expensive, that the game is not worth the candle, and when justice becomes expensive - it is no longer justice. There is evidence of a growing conviction, that certain principles of justice and fair dealings are applicable in all countries the world over, and that national legislation should more clearly reflect commercial customs based on this principle.

May I here be allowed to call attention to the excellent work done by Rotary International - Association for Great Britain and Ireland in taking the initiative in bringing about a joint conference between Rotary club representatives and the League of Nations Union, which took place in London in January of this year.

A resolution was adopted in favor of bringing before the forthcoming economic conference of the League of Nations a proposal for league action in regard to international standards of business practice. The proposal is "That the league shall initiate machinery whereby the standards of business practice of the world shall be studied and compared, and that everything possible may be done towards removing such practice as may be conducive to international misunderstanding and ill will."

There is no question about the fact, that economic conflicts are the principal causes of war. Improvement in business ethics will therefore tend to prevent that explosive accumulation of ill feeling and national jealousy, which, if allowed to go on long enough, unquestionably leads to war and destruction. It may here be worth mentioning that the four most Northern nations, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland have just concluded treaties under which all matters of dispute without exception are to be settled by arbitration, and it is hoped that settlement by war between these countries will be ruled out forever.

ARMLESS AND LEGLESS BEGGERS MADE TO ORDER IN BOWERY NEW YORK, June 16. —Down in the Bowery there is a "speakeasy" where armless, legless and hunchback persons are made to order, it was disclosed in Essex Market Court Monday by Arthur Williams of Boston.

Williams, apparently without a right arm, was asking persons to "help a poor war veteran" when detectives arrested him. At the police station he was searched. "Well what did you find?" the Lieutenant asked. "We found his right arm," said the arresting officer.

The prisoner then revealed that a friend told him about the Bowery "clearing house." "He told me they could make you a real beggar" Williams said. "I decided to be an armless veteran for the day while my friend became a legless veteran."
