YESTERDAY morning a sad double drowning accident took place near Alberton, when two young men, Divinity students supplying in local churches lost their lives. The young men, Edward Hill and George Harris, who were boarding at the home of Mrs. Captain Larkin, left between 9 and 10 a. m. to go for a swim in Dock Creek, about one mile away. As they did not return by 12.30 p. m. Mrs. Larkin became anxious. Accordingly she notified her neighbor, Mr. Fred Hardy, Customs Officer. Mr. Hardy, accompanied by others, he went to the shore, where they met an Indian of whom they inquired if he had seen anything of the missing men. He told them that he had not, but that he had seen men's clothes on the bank.

A search was made in the creek near where the clothes were lying, with the result that the bodies of the young men were discovered at about 2 p. m. in seven feet of water. Harris's body was floating in the bottom, but Hill was lying on the surface. The bodies were brought up, as though he were the victim of a sudden cramp, found the tide was out, so that when the fatality occurred there must have been ten or twelve feet of water at the place where they were swimming. Both of the young men were about twenty-three years of age. Mr. Hill, who had been for the past six or eight weeks has his home in Missouri. He was a student at Princeton University. Mr. George Harris was an under graduate in his third year at King's University, and had been conducting the service of the Church of England during the summer. He was a native of Halifax, where his widowed mother resides. The coroner, Dr. Champion O'Leary, decided that the drowning was accidental, and that an inquest was unnecessary. The bodies of the young men are lying in Bowmiers Undertaking Parlors, Summerside. They will be despatched to their homes today.
