HOLMAN'S CHARLOTTETOWN SUMMERSIDE

The SNAPSHOT GUILD SNAPSHOTS AT NIGHT

Just a few bright lamps and a little care make indoor snaps like this easy. Arrangement of lights, subject and camera indicated in the diagram.

NTIL recently, the idea of making snapshots at night ranked aside that other classic picturing impossibility—a snapshot of black cat in a coal pile at midnight. But now, with the new extremely sensitive films and brilliant, expensive lights, snapshots in at night are as easy as any day.

First, say you want to snap Sue at the piano—assuming that Sue is and feels natural there—take your stand, with camera, off to side of the piano. There's an ordinary floor lamp—one of those light affairs—just beyond the to and another on your side. Lamps are just beyond the field your camera finder. Tilt the lens so that the light reaching the subject is unshaded. Put two three photoflood-type lights in lamp that's beyond your subject, one in the nearer lamp, turn on—and blaze away.

Second, shield your camera lens from the direct rays of light.

Third, while you can use photofloods (they cost a quarter and are good for at least two hours of picture making) in ordinary fixtures, they are more efficient in reflectors—either home-made or inexpensively purchased.

Fourth, don't try to light up everything in a picture. Shade is just as important as the highlights.

Fifth, avoid lighting that illuminates both sides of a subject's face equally. The result will be flat and unnatural.

Sixth, always use modern, super-sensitive film. It's available in the standard makes, at very slight extra cost.

Indoor snapshots may also be made with photoflash bulbs. If you want to stop ping-pong players in action, for example, these handy, safe, inexpensive flash bulbs are just the thing. One of the medium-size bulbs will do very well in an average room. If you haven't a battery-operated holder for flash bulbs, you can screw the bulb into any standard electric light socket and, when all's set, turn on the current.

The possibilities for indoor snaps are endless. If you haven't tried your hand at this kind of snapshotting, you're missing a lot. And that's too bad.

JOHN VAN GUILDER.

NEWSY NOTES

A TIMELY GIFT

As the Christmas season approaches, the question "What shall I give to-and-fo?" often presents a very puzzling problem. If the proposed recipient is a schoolboy, or schoolgirl, no gift will be more interesting or give more lasting pleasure than a copy of Mr. Tutin's new book, "The Common Birds of Nova Scotia." This might just as well have been entitled the "Common Birds of P. E. Island" since the fifty or more birds recorded are found here also. Each bird has with general notes on its habits, a colored plate, and a page of most interesting observations on its habits, etc., which readily enable the novice to identify it. Toys and such like gifts have their day and "cease to be" in short order, but good books, like this, will take care of (and every child should be taught this) is a source of perennial delight.

A chapter on bird-houses feeding stations, and bird-baths with general notes on attracting feathered visitors, embodies the result of many years' experience.

This book may be had from Mr. Robie W. Tutin, whose address is Wolfville, N.S., and the price I understand is $1.25.

THE MAMMALS OF P. E. ISLAND

There are no wild animals of the order Ungulata (or hoofed animals) now found in the Province but in Bain's day the antlers of the Elk or Moose were sometimes picked up in the wilder districts. This leads to the belief that this deer "once ranged here as it now does on the adjacent continent of North America.

Finally we come to the great and important order of the Carnivora or "flesh-eaters." These as will be seen later, often come into direct conflict with the interests of mankind.

The Common Seal, says Bain, is quite common in our bays. In his time the herds of seals used to come on shore at "Gallias Point" for the purpose of basking on the sands. There was a great incursion of these intelligent animals into our waters in the early spring of 1933. The walrus (trichechus rosmarus L.) is another Island animal of the long ago, which under the incorrect name of the sea-cow was hunted for its hide and oil, and at last exterminated. It is still to be found—though in diminishing numbers—in other places, but a straggler which came to our shores in 1928 was at once killed. The walrus is a tusk which it employs to dig the shellfish on which it feeds. The true sea-cow (Rhytina stelleri) of the North Pacific was exterminated by the Russian seal-hunters, the last recorded specimen being killed in 1768. This creature fed on seaweeds, and thereby earned its name.

Twenty-five years ago, the Black Bear was still a name to frighten the youngsters with, and keep them in of nights. An old resident of this place where I first lived, told me that when a little fellow, his father had taken him to see the carcasses of three bears which were lying in the kitchen of the house wherein I had come to sojourn. Bain, in 1899, refers to these animals as being still found in the large wooded tracts of the eastern and western counties. It would be of great interest to the present writer, if some reader could give the date of the last appearance of a bear in our midst.

The Otter is another of our carnivora which has seemingly disappeared. This animal normally feeds on fish, though, if times are hard, it will turn its attention to lambs and poultry. It is remarkable that it still survives in the Old Country, in spite of the fact that it is hunted every year with packs of otter-hounds. I have not heard of this animal for years and should be glad to hear when the last specimen was seen or captured in the Island.

TWO PROPHECIES

We have lately been reading a good deal about the ability of the surgeons of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. to "raise the dead"—at least in certain cases, which recalls the story of William Watson, the great Victorian poet, once wrote a poem with a pessimistic ending, on this very subject. The gist of it (if memory serves) was that mankind in the course of the centuries conquered an enemy, the disease of "rot" which turned to the conquest of death. There came a day when the word pealed forth that the last enemy was destroyed and thenceforward a happy immortality was to be the lot of every man.

But more than immortality is needed to produce happiness, and under the stress of worldly affairs life, without any hope of relief, proved too irksome to be borne; and mankind at last prayed for a Creator (who had been looking on with pitying eyes) to take away the doubtful boon and give them rest.

Another great paragraph tells us that parathyroid gland extract has been fed to rats and other animals with remarkable results. The young of these creatures were born in an advanced condition with teeth, etc., as if they were several weeks old; and the account ends with the scientist wondering what the effect would be if the extract were fed to humans.

Years ago, before H. G. Wells concerned himself with his particular brand of politics, he used to write fiction which had a scientific basis. A serial of this nature appeared in one of the London papers, and the above paragraph recalls it.

The subject was the discovery of a marvellous body-building substance which gave the title to the book "The Food of the Gods." Only Wells' rats (which stole the "food" grew to the size of pigs! This excellent piece of scientific fooling is well worth reading, as are other two prophecies works by the same author, "The War of the Worlds" and "When the Sleeper Wakes."

NOTES ON LICHENS

While on a ramble back in the fields, I came upon a boulder thickly encrusted with the little green goblets of a species of Cladonia, a lichen closely allied to the Reindeer Moss, which in some countries sustains all forms of life in the same manner as grass does here. Desirous of examining this lowly plant at greater leisure, I dislodged a portion of it from the boulder, and was interested to find that it arose from a matrix of brown sand-colored vegetable matter, (the remains of older lichens) almost an inch thick. This must have taken many years to form, for the annual increment from such an organism is exceedingly small. Nevertheless, (I reflected) it is solely by means of these insignificant plants that our Island became capable of sustaining a higher order of beings. The raw red sandstone grew these lichens for centuries before there was a sufficiency of humus to allow a foothold for the grass and trees which enraptured the gaze of Cartier and the first explorers. And it is a few, a very few inches of disintegrated sandstone loaded with humus, that is the basis of my property that we now have.

Looking on these growths with the eye of the naturalist rather than that of the economist, we still find them wonderful. Lichens were formerly considered to be a special

Beavers Use Railway Fence Wire for Dam

Railway section forces who were working on a railway fence along the lines of the Canadian National in Nova Scotia happened to leave a quantity of the wire lying on the ground with the idea of returning later and taking it to be used elsewhere. On their arrival at the spot where they had left the wire they found it had disappeared. Farm fences in the vicinity did not give evidence of the lost railway wire and the railway section forces had the idea of transporting the product of the nation's industry demanded that the dam be destroyed.

Queen Presiding At Victoria Club

(By The Canadian Press)

LONDON, Dec. 7.—A queen is president of the Victoria Club for Ladies, in the person of Queen Amelia of Portugal. This club, founded 1894, is just taking over one of London's millionaire mansions.

The new premises, No. 9, Holkin Street, was the home of Hugh Morrison, one-time Conservative M. P. for Salisbury, who left a fortune of about $10,000,000, and of Lady Mary Morrison, his widow, who lived there till she died last spring. The next door to the Earl of Granard's town house, and is one of the most beautiful and spacious houses in London.

When the new premises open the club will be seen to be all that its present day women get "with her sports car and her latched key and modern mother could desire." As well as a lovely cream-paneled dining room there is to be a snackbar and bar, and a magnificent ballroom. There are also to be suites as well as bedrooms and squash courts.

Rare Leopard Fish Caught Off N.S. Coast

BOSTON, Dec. 7.—A three-foot 25-pound leopard fish, described by marine experts here as the sixth of the species ever found, was brought into the fish pier here today with the return of the trawler Comber. The strange fish, which normally habitates on frigid Arctic waters, was caught several days ago on the fishing banks east of Nova Scotia.

Marine biologists at the United States Bureau of Fisheries, who examined the fish, described it as of the wolf or catfish family. It is gray with black spots and has a hard bone-like plate in the upper jaw used to crack large shell fish.

TORONTO, Dec. 7.—A book of child poetry—"Toy Balloons"—illustrated by Elaine Dean and written by Florence Steiner, author of "Toy Ships," is one of the Christmas juvenile book offerings. Miss Steiner is a well-known member of the Canadian Women's Press Club.

A former member of the club, known both in Toronto and the West is Lynn Sherman, whose discerning book of critical biography of China's national hero, "Sun-Yat-Sen" is just published. A verse in the preface "To Ohtina" begins:

"Known by a memory, crisp but incomplete, home of my childhood, not of all the year—the poet wonders if the country is only a dear dream colored by her youth, or half a truth. Some 'sweet of dream' is needed for use to feed on, for we cannot stand base truth, so she ends: 'Teach me to bite the truth, yet taste my dreams.'"

Leaves Cadence To Reader Mind

(By The Canadian Press)

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—Gertrude Stein, the Paris writer, whose peculiar infatuation with words, seemingly strung together in meaningless repetition, has given her a reputation all her own, has been lecturing in this city after an absence abroad from her native America for 30 years.

"The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas," her secretary, will be remembered as being published in The Atlantic Monthly not long ago. There Miss Stein is pictured as the friend of modern artists and writers.

She maintains that when she wrote "a rose is a rose," a rose she made a "ring of poetry" in "addressing and caring in the flow." She has no use for punctuation thinking that writing should flow along with no breaks, leaving cadence and sense to the mind of the reader.

HEAVY OVERSEAS TRAVEL TO OLD COUNTRY

MONTREAL, Que. Dec. 6.—The volume of passenger traffic, especially eastbound, en route to the Old Country, is rapidly increasing and it appears that with times improving, many people are taking advantage of the opportunity to visit Great Britain and European centres," states C. "For the last few days it has been necessary to operate extra sleepers eastbound from Winnipeg to accommodate passengers booked for overseas. Generally speaking, it looks like an 'Old Country Winter' and transportation circles will note a heavy increase in this class of traffic."

RUSS WOMEN TURN TO BEAUTY CRAFT

MONTREAL, Dec. 7.—(By The Canadian Press)—After years of concentration on work, women in Russia have turned to beautifying themselves according to Madame Helena Rubenstein, in Montreal recently after a visit to that country. Cosmetics are so much in demand there, she said, that with 10,000 Soviet women in Leningrad working in three shifts to supply aids to beauty the supply is still far short of the requirements.

"Of course," Madame Rubenstein added, "in her eagerness to make herself attractive, the new Russian woman is over-bleaching her hair and painting and powdering herself like the marionettes in a puppet show. But this will pass, and a more subtle ideal of beauty will take its place, an ideal which the Russian theatre will have much to moulding, because it is building beauty on modern but eternal principles." And this will be an influencing factor in the lives of the theatre-loving Russians.
