GREAT BRITISH

powerful and dangerous enemy that ever menaced Great Britain on the blue water. And, to climax his career, he held the highest service position at the Admiralty during the most critical phase of naval administration that has ever occurred in time of peace.

David Beatty—later to be known as Earl Beatty, Viscount Borodale and Baron Beatty of the North Sea and of Brookby (county Leicester)—was born Jan. 17, 1871, and was the second son of David Longfield Beatty of Borodale, county Wexford.

He entered the navy as a cadet on the famous training ship Britannia in 1884, when he was only 13, and in 1892 became lieutenant. In most of Britain's "little wars" of that period he played a worthy part.

With Kitchener up the Nile he commanded one of the flotillas of gunboats which accompanied Lord Kitchener's advance up the Nile in the Sudan campaign of 1898-8. His gallantry and good leadership earned him the rank of commander and the D.S.O. Two years later he was in the Barleur on the China station when the Boxer rising took place. He was twice wounded in leading a successful attack on two Chinese batteries when the British naval forces made their first efforts to relieve the besieged legations in Peking (now Beijing). At 23 when most officers consider themselves fortunate if they have obtained commander's rank, he was captain. A long break then occurred in his active service record.

In May, 1901, he married Ethel, daughter of Marshal Field of Chicago, and was no longer dependent on his profession. In the navy it was believed that having been promoted rear-admiral before he was 40 he would not be employed as a flag officer. Winston Churchill went to the Admiralty in 1911, however, and his estimate of Beatty's qualities led him to secure Beatty as his naval secretary.

War Activities
 In 1913 Beatty was given command of the first battle cruiser squadron, that new combination of high speed with tremendous hitting power of which so much was expected in the event of war. In 1914, therefore, at the outbreak of hostilities Beatty was occupying a position second only to that of the Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Fleet.

Before the war was a month old he made his dash and successful operation into the Heligoland Bight, where he sank three cruisers and one destroyer, his own squadron suffering no loss. In January, 1915, there was the terrific action of the Dogger Bank in which, it is true, the British forces paid heavy toll, but which nevertheless put an end to German "cut and run" raids on English coastal towns. In that year Beatty was made vice-admiral.

His fame reached its highest peak in the first phase of the battle of Jutland. Over this fight controversy has raged ever since and is certain to continue. Of Beatty it may be said without question that he reached the height of his fame in popular estimation. Everybody's imagination was fired at the manner in which Beatty, after his advanced squadron had suffered shattering loss, continued to fight on in the determination to lead the enemy within the reach of the guns of the Grand Fleet. The escape of von Scheer from the trap laid for him will furnish a topic for high argument for years to come, but Beatty's reputation is secure for all time.

Succeeded Jellicoe
 At the end of 1916 Beatty succeeded Lord Jellicoe as Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Fleet and on Nov. 19, 1916, at Scapa Flow in the Orkneys he received from Rear-Admiral Hugo von Murer the surrender of the German fleet, issuing the historic order that the German flags should be "hailed down at sunset and not hoisted again."

Beatty was elevated to the peerage in 1919 as Earl Beatty of the North Sea and of Brookby and Viscount Borodale of Wexford. In the same year he was made an Admiral of the Fleet. Parliament expressed to him the thanks of the nation for his services and voted him a grant of £100,000. In the same year, too, he hailed down his flag as Commander-in-Chief, and in November went to the Admiralty as first sea lord. For two years he was mainly occupied in reducing the navy to a peace footing. Further cuts were made from 1922 onwards, as a result of the Washington Conference at which Beatty represented Great Britain.

Having crossed the Atlantic to attend this naval limitation conference, he took occasion to visit Canada. His tour took him to Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, where he received enthusiastic public greetings.

Hat on Side
 In an interview he gave while in the United States, he explained why he always wore his hat at a jaunty angle.

"It's not swank. It's a bump," he said, explaining that a peculiar cranial conformation made it uncomfortable to wear his stiff naval cap level. It always gave him a headache when he did so.

As first sea lord Beatty more than once proclaimed his belief that naval co-operation of the De-

Bromo, Mr. Fred Large; Cracrus, Mr. Edmund Christopher; and Trivia, Miss Betty Holl. The next to enter were Italian clowns, Fat-bino, Mr. Peter Crichton; Colum-bino, Miss Dorothy Dumont; and Ha-aquin, Mr. Nial Burnett. The last group were eighteen century English characters, Sir Thomas Whiffle, Mr. James Calder; Lady Whiffle, Miss Edna Burke; Bump-kin, Mr. Roland Taylor.

The play was directed by Mrs. Frances Holl Trainor.

The second play was "Circumstantial Evidence", the production which took second place at the regional festival at St. John recently. It was directed by Mrs. Ruby M. Houle.

The scene of the play was in England at the county residence of the Secretary of State for Home Affairs, The Rt. Hon. Edward Spencer. The role was most ably taken by Mr. Ian Smith. The story dealt with the request for a reprieve for Frank Stebbins, convicted on circumstantial evidence to die for the murder by poisoning of his father-in-law. The condemned man's wife, Nancy, interviewed the Rt. Hon. Spencer but her pleadings were of no avail. Miss Marie Arsenault was outstanding in the role of Nancy. Finally a few minutes before the execution Terry Cutler, flying on a non-stop flight from Australia to England crashes near the Spencer home. Taken into the house he recognizes where he is and manages, although injured, to give Spencer a letter dropped into his plane when he was taking off. The letter turns out to be from the dead man and tells Spencer that he had killed himself and arranged for suspicion to fall on Stebbins who he hated. He also hated Spencer who one time had sent him to prison for forgery. He therefore sent the letter to Australia to a pal to mail so that Spencer would get it after the condemned man died and would then be filled with remorse for sending to his death an innocent man. The letter came by the non-stop flier much quicker than he thought. Stebbins had but a minute to live when Spencer read the letter and while he was attempting to get a telephone through to the prison the clock struck nine, the hour for the execution. The play had a very dramatic ending with Spencer dropping the receiver as he realized he was seconds too late and Stebbins' wife falling in a swoon when she heard the clock strike nine.

Other players taking part were: Mrs. Spencer, wife of the secretary of Home Affairs, very capably taken by Miss Margaret Sterns; Ivor Clark, a private secretary, Mr. A. M. Douglas; John Robson, a former detective, Mr. A. Cooper; Terry Cutler, the airman, Mr. Charles Jenkins; and Rawlings, the butler, Mr. Samuel Vail.

The following orchestra supplied music between acts.
 Conductor: Harry Gomez.
 First Violin: Minnie Leavitt, Helen Wood, Judson Logan, Mrs. Nell McLean.
 Second Violin: John Denny, Helen Lawson, Mary McKay, Jean McKay.
 Cello: Mrs. Harry Gomez.
 Piano: Rena Wood.

The following also assisted in last night's production: Costumes: Miss Mary Ramsay; dances, Miss Mary Williams; make-up, Mr. Austin Trainor; electricians, Messrs. Rendle Larter and Ernest Lord; stage carpenters, Messrs. W. Trainor and S. Leigh.

CUNDALL HOME HOLDS MEETING

The Women's Executive Board held its annual meeting yesterday afternoon in the drawing-room of the Cundall Home. The President, Mrs. F. M. Stewart, occupied the chair and a goodly number of members and friends were present. The meeting opened with a hymn followed by prayer.

The minutes of the last annual meeting were read and approved.

The treasurer's report followed and was seconded by Mr. D. A. MacKinnon who spoke in very high terms of the Cundall Home with its many advantages offered to young ladies. Being a near neighbour he had observed its protecting influence which could not be had in an ordinary boarding-house.

A splendid report covering in detail the year's work was read by the superintendent, Miss Maude Haslam, while Miss Carrie Woodside gave an interesting review of the girls' studies and gymnasium activities. These were responded to by Mr. H. Winchester who emphasized educational and social advantages which the Cundall Home offers to young ladies attending college.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. W. Miller; Vice-President, Mrs. W. A. Huestis; Treasurer, Mrs. A. E. Morrison; Secretary, Mrs. Jack MacDonald; Cor. Secretary, Mrs. J. Harris.

Members of the executive: St. Paul's Church, Mrs. H. D. Raymond, Mrs. Champion, Miss A. Horne, Trinity, Mrs. E. Higgs, Mrs. Green, Baynet, Mrs. E. Bethune, Mrs. S. Kennedy, Central Christian, Mrs. F. M. Stewart, Zion, Mrs. H. Hill, Church of Scotland, Mrs. E. MacLaren, St. Peter's, Miss M. Cotton, St. James, Mrs. H. S. Henderson.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem, after which tea was served in the dining-room.

minion must form an integral part of imperial defence. The Royal Australian Navy, he once declared, was an excellent example of the form that co-operation could take. It had been accepted that co-operation by the Dominion navies, manned by Dominion men, based on Dominion ports, would be the most successful and most efficacious fostering of interest and national pride in naval forces.

IN MEMORIAM

LINES IN MEMORY OF THE LATE MRS. ALICE MACDONALD OF KINGSBORO

I saw her gaired hands on her pulseless breast;
 I saw the line of death upon her cheek;
 I almost felt the silence of those lips
 That never more in this sad world shall speak.

A look of peace was on her pain-lined face;
 A calm untroubled look that seemed to say
 "I've left the sorrows of the world behind,
 And gone to realms of eternal day."

Here was a life of suffering and of pain.
 She bore her cross in silence day by day.
 For her, on earth, no rose-strewn path of ease,
 But pain and travail till her latest day.

In silent fortitude she bore her cross.
 Not ere rebelled against the Master's way;
 In loving trust she lived each day,
 In faith,
 Saying "Thy will be done, Dear Lord I pray."

Oh death to her was but a sweet release!
 It broke the fetters that over her held away,
 And gave to her a new world for the old—
 A spotless garment for a form of clay.

And when He gathers jewels for his crown
 Shall shine among them fairest of the fair,
 No more with pain-racked limbs shall move,
 But with the lightness of an angel fair.

Oh you who knew a mother's tender love
 Weep not for one who'd passed away,
 But think of her as one who fell asleep
 To wake with Jesus on the judgment day.

And we who yet remain a little while
 Shall something from her life desire to glean;
 To murmur not when pain is hard to bear,
 But look to Jesus with an earnest men.

WOMAN CAPTAIN OF LAKE SCHEONER DIES IN PORT HURON

PORT HURON, Mich., March 10—Mrs. Sophia Maud Buckley, 76, credited by sea-faring associates with having been the only woman to captain a three-masted schooner on the great lakes, is dead here. Captain W. J. Small of Port Huron, one of the coast guardsmen who rescued the crew of her ship when it grounded south of Harbor Beach 46 years ago, recalled today that the woman skipper had insisted on being the last to leave the vessel.

Before she retired nine years ago, Mrs. Buckley was head cook for the Canadian Steamship Company fleet. She died in a hospital here.
