LORD STRATHCONA NELSON BEQUESTS

and it meant that everything made out of it should bear his monogram and should be used for the good of British sailors and not converted into any article of merchandise. As Strathcona Commissioner he had been able to arouse a deep interest in the matter from one end of the Dominion to the other; and the thing that should encourage them at the present moment was that while these souvenirs carried their minds back to the glorious past, they had abundant evidence to-day of the unparalleled service, as the Prime Minister of Great Britain recently said, which the Navy is rendering to the Empire and the world in our own time. If they could imagine Nelson returning in these days and looking over the sea filled with ironclads, they would hear him say: "Ships have changed; the spirit of men remains." It is the same Nelson spirit—he said—in the Royal Navy to-day that keeps us supreme in all the changing conditions; the same spirit that will inspire us evermore. The Navy would do its duty, he continued, in the face of those serving on the sea, he did not for one moment undervalue the noble services of the troops. They also had sustained the best traditions of the British Empire. The Marne would be classed among the decisive battles of the world, and our troops from all parts of the Empire, he well sustained the honour of our arms in the field. He emphasized the work of the Navy, however, because it was his particular province. This, he said, should serve to remind them that our great British traditions, coming from the Old Land, should be preserved in these remote countries and the overseas Dominions, in order that Nelson and his story and Nelson and his accomplishments might never be forgotten. It should be a symbol of our Imperial unity. He was happy to remind his audience that while the bust was made of the metal of the ship and the five-inch column was of real Victory oak, the pedestal was made in Canada, a work of Canadian art, and a symbol that Canada was sustaining the great and noble traditions of the British Empire. Mr. Hall then called on Capt. Campbell, in his capacity of Superintendent of Education, to place a metal case into the pedestal, "so that posterity, some day opening it may find a list of schools and colleges in this province which received the Nelson shield at the time of distribution. Capt. Campbell, he said, had entered on a new phase of life. He had made an excellent civilian, and Mr. Hall was sure he would make an excellent soldier. (Applause.)

His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor then, in a few fitting remarks, accepted the bust on behalf of the province, stating that it would be a symbol of the link binding the Mother Country and the overseas possessions together. Lieutenant-Colonel Jenkins then accepted the gift on behalf of the Government. He expressed regret at the absence of the Premier and Acting Premier, but concurred in the sentiments expressed by the Governor. Mr. Hall then presented the souvenirs before mentioned to His Honour, Col. Jenkins, the Premier, Capt. Campbell and the men of the Battery. In presenting the medal to Capt. Campbell, Mr. Hall paid that gentleman a warm tribute. He said that he had been received by Capt. Campbell, as Superintendent of Education, with splendid courtesy and had received more help from him than from any other minister in a similar position in the Dominion. Campbell was an educationist from top to bottom, he said, and he was sure that the Captain would bring to bear on his military duties the splendid qualities which he displayed in his capacity as Superintendent of Education. With a few happy remarks by Mr. Hall, who said that he had heard some sailors on three of His Majesty's Warships say that there was "no place in Canada where they could spend a better time than in Charlottetown," the proceedings terminated with the singing of the National Anthem.

Commissioner, delivered an eloquent and eminently interesting lecture, to a large and representative audience on "How British Sailors Serve the Empire," or, as it is properly entitled, "Under Three Ensigns."

The proceedings were presided over by Rev. Dr. Fullerton, who introduced Mr. Hall. Having alluded to his visit on a former occasion, when he spoke of the glories of the Navy of 100 years ago, the speaker declared that on this occasion he had an even greater theme—the gallantry and force of the British Navy in these thrilling times.

The men of the Navy, he said, in part, are the sea guardians of the Empire, the bulwarks watching our Imperial inheritance. They convey and convey our contingents to the scene of the great conflict; they carry our overseas mails; they are holding everything together. Only now is the Empire awakening to their immense and daring tasks. The work of the fleets is carried out under three ensigns—the white ensign of the British Navy, the blue ensign of the Royal Naval Reserve and the red ensign of the merchant ships. The British Navy, these three ensigns, is at once the flower and the force of British progress.

Britain has always made much of the fleet. Thus it is set down in the declaration in the articles of war carried by our ships: "It is upon the Navy that, under God, the wealth, prosperity and peace of the Empire depend." Emrysion, among poets, saw most clearly the modern aspects of sea power when he sang: "The fleet of England is her all in all, and in her fleet her fate." How the men under these ensigns, have responded to the call of the Empire is one of the incomprehensible things of modern history. It is the glory of the marine services; it is the honour of the flag and the salvation of the liberties of the civilised world. Five times before in history the Navy has thwarted the would-be masters of the world. It is now engaged in doing it for the sixth time, and all the world wonders as it watches the result. The relatively small numbers of men engaged in the war strength of the Navy was pointed out, the total strength consisting of only 151,000 men, largely increased, of course, from the Naval Reserve and the mercantile marine, but still a precious handful to accomplish its mighty tasks.

In answer to the speaker pointed out that it consists of three fleets—first, the fleet in full commission; secondly, the fleet in active commission; thirdly, the fleet in reserve commission, each fleet consisting of 144 fighting vessels of considerable power. There are four squadrons of battleships in each fleet, and a single squadron as ten regiments of cavalry. The cost of modern battleships was pointed out. The 27 ships of Nelson's Trafalgar fleet cost 7 1/2 million dollars; nowadays one big battleship costs from 12 to 15 millions, these at his disposal for present emergencies. At the beginning of the war Britain and her allies had 1,115 ships, and Germany and her allies 212, in air strength, Britain and her allies 1,077, and Germany and her allies 242. The speaker contended that the exhibition of these figures was sufficient to reveal the madness of the German attempt. The great achievement of Trafalgar, exclaimed the speaker in an eloquent passage, has been surpassed in our time, for in 14 days from the declaration of war four stupendous achievements were placed to the credit of the white ensign of the British Navy—i.e. panic was averted throughout the Empire; the strangulation of German shipping was complete; all the seas were open to British ships; and our expeditionary forces were carried over the sea without losses. Trafalgar was eclipsed in a bloodless display of sea power; the German high seas fleet was completely bottled up in a canal; and, as a French statesman put it, "the heart of the German merchant fleet ceased to beat." Pathetic reference was made to the loss of life sustained, and the speaker told of one street in Chatham, England, where there are 180 widows of British sailors.

Mr. Hall concluded his magnificent address in a striking quotation: "The meteor flag of England shall yet be a terrific burn." "Till danger's troubled night depart and the star of peace return." This lecture, which was highly appreciated by the large audience, was recently delivered by the Rev. Dr. Hall before the officers and members of the Royal Naval College, Halifax, where he was complimented on the correctness of the details in his naval oration.

About fifty lantern slides were shown after the lecture, depicting, in three series, the days of Nelson, well-known among the sailors, and some aspects of the war.

A vote of thanks to the lecturer was moved by Mr. Justice Hazard, seconded by Major Bartlett and supported by Mr. James Paton, M.L.A., and unanimously carried. It was presented to Mr. Hall by the Chairman, Dr. Fullerton, and was briefly replied to by the lecturer.

With the singing of the National Anthem an interesting and intellectual evening was brought to a close.

DAWN AND DARK. The stars shine in the heavens The moon with bubbling mirth Smiles with a joyful gleam As it beams upon the earth But the change comes o'er the firmament. The stars have crept away, A streak of light in the east appears, Behold! there dawns—the day.

CUTTING DOWN EXPENSES.

A great number of people have, unfortunately, had their earnings reduced since the war, and consequently they deem it wise to cut down living expenses. One sensible plan is to eat less of the highly refined foods and meats and more of the coarser and more nutritious cereals such as Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal. This is the most wholesome, most nourishing, and most healthful cereal food on the market, and costs much less than the highly refined breakfast foods.

Don't spoil Roman Meal porridge by stirring it. Use a second basin or a double boiler and never lift the lid after making for at least half an hour. Sold by live grocers at 10 and 25 cents.

PERSONALS

Miss Isabelle M. Fraser, Clyde River, has left to visit her sister, Mrs. John R. Gillespie, Scotch Sett, N. B.

Colonel Peake, commander of the P.E. Island Siege Battery, left yesterday morning for Ottawa on military business.

Mr. John A. Matthews, Frankville, N. B., has left for his home after a very pleasant visit with friends and relatives in Clyde River, P. E. I.

Miss Margaret Gillis, Scotch Sett, N. B., has left on return to her home after visiting her relatives in Clyde River, P. E. I.

Mrs. S. F. Hodgson has arrived home from a visit to Halifax accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Jamieson, who will remain here for two or three weeks.

Her friends will regret to learn that Miss Laura Matheson, daughter of Mr. Malcolm Matheson, North West-Island, who has been ill at the P. E. Island Hospital for the past few weeks, is very low at present. Not much hopes are now entertained for recovery.

Miss Olive L. McFarlane, Marshfield, arrived last Saturday by the "Empress" to spend the winter with her aunt, Mrs. Henry Duncan, Okotoks, but formerly of East Royalty. While en route she will visit relatives in Montreal, Winnipeg and Calgary. We wish her a pleasant time.

Col. F. S. Moore, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., is in the city renewing acquaintances with many former residents and friends of "The Island" capital. He is on his way to Southern California, where he intends spending the winter. While in the city, Col. Moore will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hughes of Shaughnessy Heights.—Vancouver Province, Nov. 3.

THE VICTROLA AND THE COMMUNITY—NO. 4

says: "If people knew the health-giving relief from the strain of modern living which the Victrola gives, we medical men would have less to do and every home would be happier. "When I can relax for an hour and listen to the excellent music my Victrola provides, I certainly feel the benefit. Violin music always appealed to me so I take especial pleasure in records by Elman, Kreisler or Maud Powell. I think "The Concerto for two violins" on three records by Kreisler and Elman is the finest music I ever heard. "Expensive?—Not nearly so expensive as one of my bills for mending shattered nerves. It's wonderful what excellent ten-inch, double-sided Victor Records you can get at 90c each. "No medical man can leave me out of his talk about music now, as formerly. I've got it of my own."

Victrola XVI $255 In Mahogany or Oak. Circusian Walnut $339 The instrument by which all musical instruments are judged.
