Russian Newsman In Quarrel With Press Gallery

OTTAWA, Jan. 3 - (CP) - The new Ottawa correspondent of Tass, the Russian news agency, was temporarily denied working space in the Parliamentary Press Gallery because he did not have credentials satisfactory to the gallery executive. The correspondent, Tinofey Remizov, was ordered from the gallery when he insisted that he was entitled to use the desk of his predecessor, Simon Scherbatsky, who recently returned to Moscow. Chester Bloom, 67-year-old Ottawa correspondent of the Winnipeg Free Press and Gallery privilege holder, ruled that no privileges would be given Mr. Remizov until he presented a letter from his employers accrediting him as a resident correspondent. When the Tass man persisted in his demands and said he would protest to External Affairs Minister Pearson, Mr. Bloom ordered him from the gallery and threatened to have him ejected. The Press Gallery provides working space and other facilities for accredited correspondents. It now has near 80 members and is administered by an elected executive responsible to the Speaker of the House of Commons. Mr. Pearson, when told of the incident, said it was a matter to be decided by the gallery executive. Mr. Remizov later said he was calling Moscow for the necessary credentials. He came here from the New York bureau of Tass, which has been represented in the gallery since the first Russian diplomatic mission came to Canada nearly 10 years ago. One Tass correspondent, Nicholas Zhevelov, was named as a Russian spy in 1945 in the report of the Royal Commission on Espionage. Zhevelov had returned to Moscow before the evidence was uncovered. The recent disclosure that Tass correspondents in Ottawa get some diplomatic privileges has led to a feeling by some members that Tass men should not be given gallery membership. A. D. P. Heeny, Undersecretary of State for External Affairs, told the Commons Committee on External Affairs that Tass correspondents, as members of the Russian Embassy staff, get some privileges such as immunity from income tax and freedom from customs examination on entry to the country. PROLIFIC OYSTER The oyster, which becomes an adult in three years, is said to be capable of laying 60,000,000 eggs in a year. Naturalists say the ancestors of modern snakes had four limbs, which now remain as mere vestiges in certain species.

URGES NEW SLANT

PARIS, Dec. 30 - (AP) - Orson Welles says Hollywood should stop sending Europe so many movies extolling the riches of the United States and put out a few showing her faults. The actor said in an interview that "what is needed is more pictures which frankly criticize the shortcomings and weaknesses of America, because nothing stops criticism like self-criticism."
