PROTECTING YOUR BEAUTY IN SUMMERTIME

In the olden days milady's vacation activities meant nothing more strenuous than a walk down a shaded street, or perhaps a leisurely drive in the family carriage for which she had the protection of a mushroom straw hat, plus parasol and veil.

Extra Effort Worthwhile

To be sure the problem does seem almost impossible, but getting right down to business, isn't the feeling that one still has some claim to beauty worth a little extra effort? After all, there is no good reason why a woman who loves outdoor life and the active sports of summer should neglect the feminine graces.

So, whether milady is traveling or vacationing at home, let her not forget that her beauty kit during the summer is perhaps more important than it is at any other season.

And Have a Clear Skin

Gently anoint the affected part with Cuticura Ointment. Wash off in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes.

What's Wrong With Your Skin? The average girl does not realize how many conditions may affect the beauty of her complexion.

should have seven and a half to eight hours' sleep every night, and they are better for a full nine hours' rest in bed, if of a nervous temperament.

Don't Forget Your Hands

The hands and nails must also receive extra attention during the summer season, for it is almost impossible to keep the skin smooth and the nails immaculate when vacationing or engaging in the sports of the summer.

Those who are planning to travel during vacation time and others who plan to be equally active in the vacation summer sports at home will find the following items quite essential to milady's beauty kit:

The Beauty Kit

First. A good cleansing cream or oil, a plentiful supply of soft pieces of old linen, pads of absorbent cotton wrapped in gauze, or tissue squares for removing the cream; tissue cream or a balsam cream for healing pimples or soothing tender skins; a lemon or cucumber cream for bleaching and massage and a mild astringent or skin tonic.

Second. Face powder or just the right shade to harmonize with one's skin as it acquires the natural tan of summer. Also include a plentiful supply of talcum powder for the feet, underarms and general use after bathing.

Third. Rouge—a deeper shade for daytime wear which will blend well with sun-tan powder, and a lighter shade for evening wear. Waterproof rouge is useful for bathing and swimming.

Fourth. Lipstick—either white or red, as preferred, to keep the lips from chapping or cracking.

Fifth. Small manure set with hand lotion, nail scissors, file and buffer.

Sixth. Pa-tums, toilet water and bath salts with a dainty floral fragrance.

Seventh. An antiseptic mouth wash, tooth powder and brush.

Eighth. Comb and brush, toilet soap and soft facial towels.

Ninth. If traveling, an eyewash will be very soothing. One teaspoonful of boric acid dissolved in one pint of boiling water and allowed to cool will make a simple, antiseptic eye wash that may be used twice a day.

Armed with her beauty kit and the determination to use it regularly and systematically, any girl or woman may enter wholeheartedly into any or all of the sports of a modern vacation with the happy assurance that her beauty will not be marred in the least. In fact, the added health which the outdoor fresh air and sunshine brings, together with the exercise provided by active outdoor sports, will only serve to enhance her natural charm and beauty.

Dorothy Dix Letter Box

How Can a Thrifty Husband Force His Wife to Provide for a Rainy Day?—Can Love be Turned on and off at Will?

Dear Dorothy Dix—It is my opinion that wives should be interested as much or even more than husbands in laying up something for the proverbial rainy day. It has been the ambition of my life to make provision for old age, for I want at least a few years of comfort guaranteed following the period when I can earn no more.

My wife is not averse to this, but the subject does not interest her. We are now both bordering on old age and although I have had a fair earning capacity during all of our married life, I have but a few thousand dollars saved up.

With her co-operation, we could live in comfort and save enough in the few working years left to me to keep us safe from dependence in our old age. Without her co-operation, I can do nothing. What is the answer? A VEXED HUSBAND.

You are right in saying that a husband and wife must do team work if they get along in the world and save up any money. No man, no matter how thrifty he is nor how much he cuts down on his personal expenditures, can make any headway in nourishing a savings bank account if he has a wasteful and extravagant wife.

There are no men in the world for whom I have more profound sympathy than I feel for those who are cursed with wives who are spenders. For no experience can be more heart-breaking, none more discouraged, none more exasperating than for a man to spend his life toiling without a thing to show for his labor but a pile of receipted bills, to see other men of no more ability than he is forging ahead, while he is tied down with the ball and chain of his wife's debts, to have his every hope and ambition blasted by his wife's senseless extravagance.

Every man knows that the door of opportunity only opens to a golden key and that if he even has a few thousand dollars saved up he can often pass through the portals that lead to fortune, but he cannot do this if his wife has spent everything he made as they went along. Every man knows that he is a slave, who is owned body and soul by his employer if he has no money in the bank, because no matter how he is treated he dare not leave if he has no money to live on for even a week.

We talk about evil women, about women who are vamps, who are gold-diggers, who are harlots, but the worst of them cannot ruin a man's life more completely than do those good, kindly, affectionate wives whose fingers merely slip away like water. Those wives who literally sell their husband's life blood for silk stockings and Paris hats and bridge prizes and cars.

If these extravagant wives only had sense enough to look at the matter straight, they would see that it is even more important for themselves that the future should be safeguarded than it is for their husbands. For a man can practically always get something to do up to the very end of his life that will make him some sort of a living, but under heaven there is no other creature so forlorn and helpless as is the middle-aged woman whose husband dies and leaves her penniless.

She knows no way of making a dollar, and she is too old to learn a new trade. She cannot compete with young girls. Nobody wants her around. Nobody will even give her a show at anything but the most menial task and there is nothing left for her but to eat the bitter bread of dependence.

If the extravagant wives could look an inch into the future they would clutch every dollar until the eagle squealed on it and they would back their husbands up in saving for that rainy day that comes to us all.

Dear Miss Dix—In one of your recent articles you say: "Love is a gift of the gods. You cannot make that, no matter how hard you try." I distinctly object to all statements maintaining the involuntary character of the emotion of love. Love is not a gift of the gods but the fruit of a sound personal character. The argument that love cannot be controlled by the lover is only a libertine's argument, constantly used as an excuse for conjugal wretchedness. It is possible and highly advisable and necessary to control not only the emotion of love but every other emotion as well by action of the will. Otherwise morals are piffle, self-control a myth and growth in grace a figment of a silly imagination.

I agree with you that it is highly advisable and necessary to control the emotion of love and every other emotion as well, but if you have found out how to do it you have discovered more than other human beings know and you should pass this great discovery on to a passion-ridden world.

There is sorrow, for example. It is useless to grieve over our dead. Not

Darjeeling and Travancore

THERE are tea gardens away up high—six thousand feet—in the Himalayas Mountains. That is where we get Darjeeling tea, famous for its rich flavor and aroma.

And there's a fine, vigorous flavory tea from the hills of Southern India known as Travancore. When picked in the period of the monsoon, when the warm, dry winds sweep over the gardens, Travancore is at its very best.

Of course, Darjeeling and monsoon-plucked Travancore are very expensive—far too costly to use in ordinary tea. But no tea is too good or too expensive to blend in King Cole Orange Pekoe.

King Cole Orange Pekoe Tea costs more—but it's worth more.

A Morning Smile

Two men had met with the intention of planting some bogus shares on a third man. The "victim" seemed impressed, but said he would think the matter over. As he left, one crook said to the other, "That's all right. You'll see to-morrow he'll hand over a cheque and sign on the dotted line."

"I'm not so sure of that," said the other. "It seemed to me he was a bit suspicious. I noticed how he counted his fingers after you had shaken hands with him."

all of our tears will bring them back to us. Tell us how to put the memories that break our hearts out of our minds. Teach us how to forget by an act of the will. There is anxiety. And despair. And regret. So many things that sadden our lives that we would like to put from us if we only knew how.

As for love being a matter of the will and subject to control, I am afraid all experience goes against you. Nobody knows why he loves or why some particular person is just "IT" with him. After we fall in love with some man or woman we wrap him or her up in the mantle of our imaginations and endow him or her with every virtue and charm. But, as a matter of fact, I doubt if any man ever fell in love with a girl just because she was good or intelligent or domestic or if any man ever fired a girl's fancy because he was honest and honorable and a leader in the prayer meeting.

Love could be made to order, John would be smitten with that nice, homely girl, with a tidy fortune who is a good cook and a good housekeeper and would make a splendid wife that his mother has picked out for him. He knows she is the kind of girl he should marry, but the one he feels he will die if he doesn't get is some little creature who is fire and quicksilver and who hasn't a penny to bless herself with or a single domestic quality.

And who can tell what makes one fall out of love? Who can tell why we get bored, why we lose interest, why the charms that once allured us fall flat? All we know is that they do, that we get fed up on a person as we do on a dish and lose our taste for it.

Very few married people would fall out of love if they could help themselves, because that always means trouble and heartache and the breaking of bonds that are not easy to sever.

We can control our actions, but not love.
