Miss Barrett conducted the exercises and the children were in thorough sympathy with their teacher and sang and recited their pieces in their own way as only happy children can. That Kindergarten is not all play was demonstrated in the intelligent manner in which the little folks explained their lessons on wood and the month of June. Little Miss Margaret Wallace had a paper written by herself on John Greenfield Whittier, which was most interesting and cleverly written for so young a child. A pretty little milkmaid's drill was much enjoyed by the audience and Miss Lena Barrett is to be congratulated on her success as a Kindergarten teacher.

HEROES.

O for the men of old, the hero's might, The knight of song and story, now no more. The strength that sate on Roman brows, the light On Sparta's field and Athens' deathless shore!

I rise my eyes, and close before my sight Stands one whose high-held head has met unwhod the anvil-blows of Fate through darkening night; Dauntless, defiant, as the shadows crowd.

From him close on my right through patient years, Pain wrings nor dark repining nor complaint; One on my left, calm-eyed, serenely nears His doom, unflinching as an aureoled saint.

I turn--behind, one on whose pathway grow Foul weeds and fouler poisons, mile on mile; What the grim night-wind hears, God knows; men know The laugh, the jest, the glory of the smile. --Charlotte W. Thurston, in June Century.
