LOST FARM LANDS

During the past 12 years, the farmers of Great Britain have lost 904,000 acres of their land to the government for various causes. The total is made up of 572,000 acres requisitioned for building and general construction; 129,000 acres for sports grounds; 129,000 acres for airfields; 64,000 acres for army areas, and 10,000 acres for various other purposes. On the basis of these figures, an average of 66,200 acres per year has been lost to British farming. In time, much of the land requisitioned for war purposes, will when the revert to its original owners, when the government can make it available.

Big Fish Deliveries Meet British Needs

As part of its program for helping to meet food needs abroad Canada undertook to supply the British Food Ministry with 73,800,000 pounds of canned salmon and canned herring from British Columbia's 1945 production and the great bulk of the shipments have already been made. Deliveries up to the end of February included more than 59,770.00 pounds of salmon and close to 6,550,000 pounds of herring.

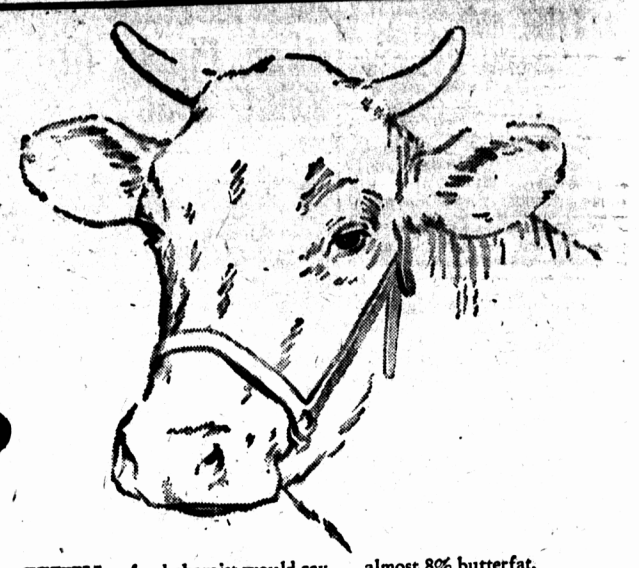
Forty-five supplies for the United Kingdom from Canada's fisheries also included 19,300,000 pounds of frozen fillets (mainly cod fillets) from the Atlantic provinces an 2,642,000 pounds of frozen Pacific halibut. In addition, moreover, to the canned salmon being supplied the Food Ministry between three and four million pounds from last year's pack are also being made available to another British agency, the London Food Council. Even at that, however, more canned salmon from '45 production has gone on the domestic market than at any time since the early days of the war—about 14,500,000 pounds as compared with 9,600,000 pounds from '43 output, for instance.

These figures take into account, of course, only the deliveries to the British authorities under agreements made between Ottawa and London. They leave out of the reckoning entirely the many millions of pounds of fish foods supplied to other countries under various plans of the United Nations for meeting urgent world food needs. Under these latter arrangements the Dominion undertook to make available Atlantic canned fish of various kinds as well as dried, pickled, and smoked fish and some British Columbia canned pilchards. The undertakings apply to the production year running from last July until the end of next June. Big quantities have already been delivered. Still larger deliveries would have been made had the shipping situation been less difficult.

Seek $100,000 To Aid The Blind

TORONTO, April 9 —(CP)—Objective for the April 15-May 4 appeal for funds by the Canadian National Institute of the Blind has been set at $100,000, Mrs. Gordon Balfour, campaign chairman, announced today.

This amount is an increase of $25,000 over last year's objective and is necessitated by an increased number of blind persons in Canada. Mrs. Balfour said more than 13,000 blind persons are registered in Canada.



WELL, a food chemist would say . . . almost 8% butterfat, about 6% protein, about 10% milk sugar, about 2% minerals . . . and that's fully twice the amounts you would find in regular milk. For Carnation Milk is regular pasteurized milk with enough of the natural water taken out to double its food values. And it has a big extra share of "sunshine" vitamin D. So whenever you want more food value, use Carnation as it pours from the can; for regular milk use, add an equal quantity of water. Carnation is Canada's largest-selling brand of evaporated milk.
