NORSE MAIL WAS ON THE WAY TO NORWAY

BERLIN, Aug. 27, by wireless telegraphy to Tuckerton, New Jersey. — The Overseas News Agency today says: "The Norwegian Minister at Berlin has telegraphed the Government that all the mail carried by the steamer Haakon VII. was already on the way to Norway. The mail pouches were opened and seached for contraband letters."

Despatches from Christiana late last week told of the halting of the Norwegian mail steamship Haakon VII., bound from Bergen to England, and the seizure of mails aboard by a German submarine. The incident was followed, it was stated, by a protest to Berlin and a demand for the return of the mail.

RUSH TO ENLIST AT BIG TORONTO

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—A monster recruiting meeting held Friday at Scarborough Beach Park, under the auspices of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association, resulted in the addition of between 400 and 500 to Canada's overseas forces. The recruiting tents were besieged and those in charge were kept busy recording names. The procession of illuminated watercraft was a feature.

A number of speakers, of whom Hon. Geo. P. Graham was the star, stirred an immense audience to wild enthusiasm, and massed bands and a chorus of picked singers kept it going. It was the biggest thing and the most successful in the recruiting line which Toronto has yet attempted.

THRILLING EXPERIENCES OF AN ISLAND SOLDIER

Dr. J. Spurgeon Jenkins comes safely through three battles -German dropping sheaves of steel arrows Canadians are not afraid

—) : (—

The following letters telling of the noble work being done by the artillery, have been received by Mr. Robert Jenkins, Mt. Albion, from his son Driver Spurgeon Jenkins:

Bailleul, France,
August 10th, 1915

Dear Dad:—This is Tuesday evening and everything is as calm and peaceful as a church. The guns are silent just now and except for a couple of our aeraplanes scouting overhead you would never know there was a war on.

We are still billeted outside "Bailleul" it is a pretty little town about twice the size of Summerside. For a wonder the Germans have never shelled it to any extent, one shell of 15 in at that was all they put in as yet or rather as far as I can find out. It happened the other morning just as we were lined up on the 9 o'clock parade. It dropped a short distance from the hospital and killed three soldiers, a woman and a little boy and wounded quite a few others. I guess it was the hospital they were trying to get.

I hope they don't shell it for a lot of Red Cross nurses are stationed there, but it will be the same old story as soon as a big battle starts on this front and we expect one at any minute, they'll blow it to pieces. Whenever a big fight starts they always shell the towns and roads for miles in the rear the idea is to try and stop us from moving up reserves and ammunition. But just the same we have to get it up whether they are shelling the roads or not. If the guns are running short we have to make a try at it anyway, no odds how thick they are sending them over. There is no such a thing as "can't" in the Canadian army or in the British either for that matter. I saw an English ammunition column attempt to go through Ypres not ten minutes ahead of us and get wiped out root and branch, lost eighty horses and forty men killed, just while you would wink an eye. They were going through a narrow street with just about room enough for two wagons to pass each other and one of the leading limbers got his horse shot going as they were on the gallop, the drivers on the one directly behind didn't pull far enough to one side to clear it, the consequence was they blocked the street and before they could clear a passage, the Germans got the exact range and wiped them out. The street was just piled with dead horses and broken limbers.

The very same morning another column coming through behind us lost twenty-eight mules and thirteen men.

The Sergt. Major of the 28th Howitzer Battery 'which were were supplying" said we were the only outfit which passed through "dead man's" line and "Suicide corner" without any casualties.

One night when it was raining to beat the band and as dark as pitch a battery of our 1st brigade ran out of ammunition. An order came down as fast as a motor cycle could bring it, for 600 rounds of 18 pounder shells as quick as possible as our guns were silent for want of it.

At the time this was happening this son of yours was cuvled up in an old straw loft along with some others snoring away, blissfully unconscious of war guns, ammunition or anything else as I hadn't had a wink of sleep for three nights previous, you dont blame me do you? But when our Sergeant Major appeared on the scene and let a few roars out of him, we began to come to life. "Hitch up on the double was the order," as our horses were all ready harnessed even to having the bits in their mouths it didn't take us long to hitch up our wagons and away we went I count this as ranking next to the Ypres trips

We didn't have such heavy shell fire on this occasion, but for hardships it was the worst I ever had. The battery was hid away in some fields and in order to reach it we had to cut through wire fences, go over ditches and I dont know what else, of course there was a proper road, cut to it, but it was too dark to find it, (we were not allowed to use a lantern) and besides our time was too valuable to waste looking for a read, so we just kept on going until we brought up against a hedge or wire fence and then dismounted and cut our way through. Each wagon carries fire cutters, axes, shovels, drag-ropes, etc. Twice the wagon I was attached to got ditched and we had to unload every bit of ammunition and get the drag ropes on the wheels before we could get either horses or waggon out.

The first ditch we got into my off horse went down almost out of sight, I thought he was a goner, we got out of this hole after some trouble, and didn't go a hundred yards till we ran plump into another. Dont ever imagine for a moment we stood around with our hands in our pockets and grumbled about our hard luck "as we would do if we were home." When these little "love tokens of the Kaiser's" keep singing in your ears you dont waste time thinking how you are going to get out but just dig in and work like mad, and its surprising how quick you'll pull out of what looks like an impossible hole.

Say Dad! if I worked half as hard on that farm of mine as I did on this particular night, I'd be a millionaire in a year.

We made a quick trip under the circumstances but nevertheless the guns were silent for two hours for want of "the necessary," as the boys say out here.

I may say Dad, that being "under fire" is one of the worst sensations I ever experienced. Shell fire is ten times worse than rifle fire. I have been under rifle fire a few times since coming over and didn't mind it a little bit, in fact it was nothing compared to those Jack Johnstons, coal boxes and a few others too numerous to mention. A fellow can get behind a house or brick wall and feel reasonably safe from bullets, but with shells you want to keep clear of those places for you are liable to get a brick on the head and that serves the purpose equally as good as a piece of shell.

When the infantry are on the move either coming or going to the trenches if they hear a shell coming they can lie down in a ditch and stay there until the danger is over, but it is quite different in our branch of the service (the artillery), you have to stand right by your horses and face the music until you get orders to move out and believe me sometimes they seem a long time coming. I think Dad I promised to tell you of one of the tightest corners I was ever in. Well here goes it.

One morning, to be exact, I think it was on the 4th of May, I was in a field between Vlamatingh and Brielen, two little towns a short distance from Ypres. About half of our section was present and we were waiting for the other half to come up from Poperwgh and relieve us, things began to get rather warm and our Captain told us to "stand to" ready to pull out at a moments notice, at this time they were putting the shells everywhere except the field we were in. Fifteen minutes of this suspense and then a German "Taube" passed over our heads and in spite of the fact that we were lined up close to the hedges it discovered us. In a few minutes they commenced putting right into the field we were in. Say, talk about making fast time getting out of a place, it was every one hitch for themselves. The only way out of it was through the town of Vlamatingh. Our hitch was just getting nicely under way when crash, bang, a "coal box" burst within thirty feet of us. I had two pieces driven through my cap and was almost blinded with mud and smoke. It took me about ten seconds to find out whether I was killed or not. That may sound rather foolish, but its a fact, I was kind of stunned by the explosion and dont know how I managed to stick in the saddle. The fellow on the head team was hit on the arm and one of our horses was struck by pieces of the shell.

When our column struck the town we separated and went different roads our hitch along with several other teams took a new road our engineers had made through a corner of the town and what do you know about it, two of our waggons got stuck in the road and couldn't move an inch, clear of the two that weere stuck our hitch was the only one left, the rest of the column were a mile or more away going like mad, and there we were all alone with the exception of a bombardier, Stafford by name. Of course we couldn't leave them there so Halt and I unhitched our lead horses and switched them out and then came back and got our own wagon.

I guess the close call I had a few minutes previous kind of unnerved me, I couldn't get the traces hooked up or a thing, everything appeared to go wrong. I never felt as though I wanted to get out of the place as bad before, and mind you all the time the shells were going over our heads two and three at a time. When we all got out, you could wring the water out of my clothes.

I can safely say it was the worst fifteen minutes I ever spent in my life.

Well Dad I must close for this time, Good bye, from your loving son

SPUR.

Baillieul, France,
August 6th, 1915.

Dear Father:—I have just a few minutes to write this as one of the boys is going on pass and said he would post it in England. Well Dad, I'm still to the fore in spite of Jack Johnstons, coal boxes, gass, liguid fuse and everything else you could possibly mention. They even drop "sheaves of steel arrows" from aeroplanes, they are built so as to fall point downward and if one of them strikes a man it will go clear through him. They carry them in bundles or sheaves and cut them apart at the moment of dropping them.

The other morning they used "liquid fire," against our infantry or rather I may say British Infantry at "Hooge." I dont think they gained much by it, as far as I can find out the moral effect is the worst, very few casualties resulted from it.

Say Dad, our own Canadian troops are simply grand, the infantry have no equals on the continent of Europe today. I'll admit they are no Barrack-room soldiers, but they are the real thing for the trenches.

I'm feeling O. K., have had it very quiet for the past few weeks outside of our aeroplane visit once in a while and a few stray shells coming our way
