WHY LORD KITCHENER NEVER MARRIED

It appears that after all there was a love romance in the life of Lord Kitchener, the details of which are now made public, for what reason it is quite clear. Why the great soldier never married was for a long time a common topic of gossip, and at various times his name was coupled with that of some famous beauty, now an American girl now an Irish woman whose Fenian principles were supposed to be the only obstacle to the union. Others asserted that Kitchener was a woman-hater. The theme recently inspired Miss Marjorie Benton Cooke to write a remarkably impudent story of the love which Kitchener was supposed to have kindled in the wife of a member of the War Cabinet, who happened to be also a German spy. To Kitchener's Joseph-like bearing in this adventure the authoress attributed his death on the Hampshire. The real story of Kitchener's heart affair disposes of all the various legends that his aloofness from women's society has given rise to.

Miss Caroline Hutcheson was the object of his affections, and the fact has been known for some years to those most intimate with Kitchener. Miss Hutcheson is said to have exerted a more powerful influence over him than any other man or woman. He was never too busy to think of her comfort, to write her notes, or to pay her frequent visits when they were in the city together. In her he found an inspiration for his patriotism, and it is said that on only one occasion did she seek to dissuade him from the path of duty. This was when he told her that he was about to visit Russia. Miss Hutcheson said that she had a presentiment that she would not see him again, and begged him not to go. Kitchener replied

The doors had closed upon Caroline Hutcheson. Her duty was to remain with her helpless aunts as long as they lived. Her career was henceforth to be in that house in Kensington. Kitchener's career was cast in Egypt and India and in other parts of the world. It was impossible in the circumstances that they should marry; equally impossible, because of their deep affection, that they should choose other mates. And this is why Kitchener lived and died a bachelor. In later years when Miss Hutcheson was freed from the care of her aunts and inherited their property she was noted for her philanthropies, and became the founder of the K. of "K. Empire Association," which did noble service in the war. When she died a couple of years ago, it was found that most of her great fortune had been distributed in charities, and particularly to the various cases given birth to by the war. Shortly before Kitchener set forth on his last voyage he suggested that Miss Hutcheson should destroy the letters he had written her, numbering several hundreds, all of which she had lovingly preserved. This was done, and half a dozen only survive as sad memorials of a great love and a great sorrow greatly borne.

that he was going at the request of the Czar, and could not ignore so plain a duty. After the destruction of the Hampshire Miss Hutcheson refused to believe that her hero was really dead, and the belief that he was somewhere a prisoner in Germany sustained her until her own death some time later. Kitchener and Miss Hutcheson met when they were boy and girl, he two or three years the elder. The Kitchener family lived in Kensington and their near neighbors were Mrs. Robinson and Miss Lucy Hutcheson, two sisters, ladies of wealth and distinction who made their home together. Mrs. Robinson was a widow, and her only son had died when in his teens. Young Kitchener was about the same age as the lad whose death had almost broken the mother's heart, and Mrs. Robinson and her sister came to entertain a great affection for the young soldier. Their home became a second home to him, and the two sisters like mothers. Miss Caroline Hutcheson was a niece of these ladies. She was born at Peterhead on Deeside, her father being Alexander Hutcheson, a gentleman of independent means. Miss Hutcheson was a beautiful Scotch girl, as intelligent as she was charming, and her aunts eventually persuaded her parents to permit Caroline to make her home with them. They devised to her all their property, the value of which was very great. It was in Mrs. Robinson's home that Kitchener and Miss Hutcheson became acquainted. They were pals and confidants before they were lovers, and indeed the record does not say that they ever were betrothed, although their eventual union was never doubted by the friends who knew them both. It happened, however, that Mrs. Robinson brought home a neglected child who had the whooping cough and she contracted the disease. To people of middle years the whooping cough is a most dangerous malady and Mrs. Robinson became an invalid for life. Some of her organs having become completely paralyzed. Her mind too, became affected, and she would eat nothing that was not given her by her young niece. It soon became apparent that as long as Mrs. Robinson should live her niece Caroline must be her chief nurse. Not long afterward the other sister was thrown from her horse and received spinal injuries which made her a bed-ridden cripple for the rest of her life.
