25 RADIUM NEEDLES ARE NOT FINISHED

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—Twenty-five radium needles will be delivered tomorrow by Eldorado Gold Mines, Ltd., of Port Hope, to Hon. J. M. Robb, Ontario Minister of Health, as the first of the precious mineral the Ontario Government is purchasing from the Canadian concern for distribution under its cancer clinic program.

The needles, first commercial radium to have been produced in Canada, will be turned over to the health laboratories, and if found satisfactory will be sent on immediately to the cancer clinic at Kingston.

All told, 325 milligrammes of radium will be bought by the Government for clinic distribution and use.

Peat and Muck Soil

Peat and muck soils consist largely of partially decayed moss, grass, swamp sedge, flags and similar plants. For many years plants of these kinds have grown and died where they stood, and in some cases their decaying remains have been accumulating for centuries.

Peat and muck soils vary greatly in competition. There are grass-peats and moss-peats, deep and shallow peats, poorly decomposed and well-decomposed peats, peats with clay subsoil and with sandy subsoil, lime-deficient peats and peats rich in lime. All of these soils cannot be handled in a similar manner, but full information about their management, drainage, cultivation, use of lime, burning, fertilizers, particular problems of muck soils, and crops is to be obtained, free on application in the pamphlet issued by the Publications Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, on crop rotations and soil management. Peat and muck soils are almost universally well provided with moisture and the presence of this moisture has prevented the entrance of air, retarded the rate of oxidation, and largely checked the decomposition of the vegetable matter of the soil.

LOANS TO BROKERS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24.—(A.P.)—Loans to brokers and dealers held by reporting New York city banks during the week ending August 23, amounted to $853,000, 000 representing a decrease of $41,900,000 under the preceding week.

Pigs on pasture should be fed the same as pigs in pens. The pasture eaten will then be an extra from which growth may be expected.

An Adventurous Wedded Life

MONTREAL, Aug. 23.—(C.P.)—Two summers spent with her husband on his trips up the west coast of Greenland have given Mrs. J. O. B. Petersen, a young Montreal woman, plenty of adventure. She admitted the life was not exactly a garden of roses. It had its dangers and its hardships, but the beauties and the glories, she felt, were more than recompense.

The dangerous thrill of seeing an iceberg born, tramping on treacherous ice packs, never knowing when they might split asunder, and buffeting heavy seas and wild storms in a small motorboat are merely a few of the adventures experienced by Mrs. Petersen. Many times the little boat had to dash for safety in some natural harbor or bay to avoid a breaking iceberg. Following a thundering explosion which acts as a warning, explained Mrs. Petersen, a slab breaks from the main berg. "Then you see the big mountain topple, slowly at first then faster and faster. It falls into the sea and commences to roll around and around, drawing up water and sending gigantic waves across the sea. Sometimes it breaks completely. Sometimes it settles again until the sun, beating down constantly, 24 hours of the day and night, breaks up the huge berg once more."

Mrs. Petersen expressed great admiration for the Eskimo, for their friendliness, cleverness and musical attainments. They were often unsanitary and their manner of eating food was not according to the standards of a more cultured civilization, she admitted, but they were likeable people and true friends. Originally superstitious to a startling degree the Eskimos have lost many of their strange beliefs due to the efforts of the Danish Government to educate them and better their conditions. Mrs. Petersen pointed out, "Yet I was in one northern village," she said, "where to burn seal oil while the hunters were out constituted the greatest offence imaginable. Eskimos are afraid of a crazy person, believing the Crevitok, or bad spirit, is in him. They also like to st over a dying person to watch, or so they say, the spirit depart from the body."

Most of the sweet "pot" herbs which may be grown in the garden are used in cooking. Some such as lemon verbena and sweet lavender are deliciously fragrant and delightful to dry and use in the household linen cupboards.

For Winter Use. Many of the sweet "pot" herbs may be dried and stored for winter use. Some are used fresh, just as they come from the garden. Borage, burnet, sweet basil, thyme, sage and savory are used after being dried. Chives, parsley, dill, chevril and mint are used fresh as well as dried.

The perennial herbs when once established, will come year after year. Thyme, for instance, is a perennial plant which grows in the form of a small shrub from six to ten inches high. The young leaves and shoots only are used. Sage and sweet majoram are both perennial plants.

The secret of fine cooking lies in seasoning and the "fagot of herbs" so often mentioned in French recipes usually contains bay-leaf, parsley, pepper-pod, carrot, celery, and chives. Soups and stews seasoned with these herbs have a savouriness quite impossible to gain by other means.

For Stuffings and Sauces. Sage, thyme, savory and majoram are used in stuffings for poultry and meats. Dill, caraway, fennel, mustard and mint are used in sauces and are pungent and stimulating. Herb vinegars are especially worth while to have on hand for salad dressings. Basil, tarragon, garlic and parsley vinegars are easily made at home. They often are the source of the indescribable taste found in French dressings served in hotels and restaurants. Tarragon vinegar should be made in August when the leaves are at their best, although the dried leaves may always be used. Four cups of hot vinegar are poured over one cup of fresh leaves and allowed to stand three weeks, stirring each day. Then the vinegar is strained and bottled ready for use.

HISTORY OF TURNIPS AND MANGELS

The history of field roots, as certain vegetable crops are called in Canadian agriculture, is an interesting one. The mangel appears to be the oldest of our cultivated root crops, says the Dominion Forage Crop Division. Although exact records are not available, the production of the mangel can be traced back as far as 2000 years before the Christian era. The evidence of its production at that date is contained on an old plate found in an Egyptian grave. The plate represents a labourer placing a large root on a table of sacrifice. According to Theophrastus, the Greek philosopher, red and white roots were commonly cultivated in Asia Minor in 320 B. C. Both mangels and beets are supposed to be descended from the beach beet which is found growing wild near the Caspian Sea, along the shores of the Mediterranean, and in Spain, France, Holland, Great Britain, and Denmark.

"War Cry" As Souvenir

Says the War Cry: In an interesting letter, describing the landing and subsequent sojourn of the Italian Air Armada, under General Balbo, at Shediac, N.B., during its historic flight, our Charlottetown correspondent, Sister L. M. Hughes, was privileged to distribute copies of "The War Cry," as Canadian souvenirs, among the members of the Squadron. Dr. Balbo, a nephew of the general, also courteously accepted a copy of The Army's White-Winged Messenger.
