First of all, gone expecting to find her there. He was hers — she let her heart sing a little, forgot for a little to feel sorrow for poor Teresa, dead. The night nurse was waiting anxiously when they arrived at Teresa's apartment. The doctor, she said, had come and gone. "There was nothing for him to do," the nurse said. "It was just a quick collapse — no pain, she just drifted away. I didn't call anyone but you. I thought you would want to tend to everything. I'll stay if you want me." "I'll be grateful if you will stay," Virginia said. "This is Mr. Harrison. He will make the arrangements."

THE KIRK PULPIT

Preaching yesterday morning on the text, "What have they seen in this man?" (The Kings 20:10), the minister, the Rev. J. W. Somers, said: "Then neither must we lose sight of the place and power of the humble prayer. Family prayer seems to have gone the way of the family pew—the loss is inestimable, and irreparable. Prayer nevertheless remains a paramount strength and refuge. When our Lord told us to 'Knock' He did not mean an occasional tap. What He really said was 'Batter at the door, and it shall be opened.' And He told the story of the importunate widow to press home his meaning. No one expects to sit down at a piano and play the works of the great masters unless he has had years of struggle and practice in the scales and exercises until he has mastered them. In the same way exactly do we learn to pray. Prayer is not magic to be called into being at a moment's notice. It is a habit to be turned on when needed and neglected for the rest of the day. Prayer is an art and discipline which is known only by those willing to pay the price in patience, perseverance and faith. When a decision is reached about the person, or the family, for whom prayer is the regular habit and atmosphere, there is no question of just carbon-like all other carbon in all respects save one. It will shine in the dark, and no other than it. In the same way, analyse them, and there is no palpable difference, but there is an inexplicable difference which is the secret of your joy and contentment, in the lives of those who have made it habitual and central. The things in heaven and earth cannot be compared. And, of course, all this means that in such a family, there is joy and peace of mind in Christ. The father, mother, sons and daughters have a depth of happiness which the world can neither give nor take away. The father and mother see plainly in their own home. That is the richest treasure you can show. That is the secret of your joy and contentment. That is the bulwark and beat of your own heart. It is so fragile, so delicate, so easily broken, that men trying to wear the veneer of Christianity without Christ Himself, and then wonder why they fall, the lack of love and peace in believing is where they fail, and where their families fall. See the difference between the grace of trust and happiness is found in yours. Will you go home now and honestly try to place it there and keep it there? "What have they seen in this house?"

safely said that this country, under the stress of war-time dislocation of population and supplies, might well have been faced with mal-made food shortages to the detriment of our all-out drive for victory.

"The grocer," Mr. Hunter pointed out, "even in the light of casual analysis of our food problem deserves a vote of thanks from Canadian industry in general and from the housewife in particular. His concern to satisfy, even in part, the insatiable demand for our daily provender, kept him and his clerks in the wholesale markets and behind the retail counter long hours, every day in the week. It was the grocer who came through with the nutritious items of diet that kept the workers of this country fit and able to meet the challenge of incessant production demands. It was the grocer who supplied the householder with sufficient quantities of food and with varieties, that in spite of the lack of essential materials, well-balanced and beautiful one."

"I am sure I am not straying far afield when I say that the grocer because of the very nature of his business, one that involves the human element as none other in this country, recognized early in the war that on the maintenance of customer goodwill depended his continuing success in the days of peace. His recovery problem consisted of trying to keep people happy for the future, a no mean task, when one considers the handicaps under which he has operated and in some instances, continues to operate."

"His manpower problem is far from solved. Shortages exist in many lines of consumer goods and will continue that way for some time. The lack of essential materials prevents him from expanding his property or making needed repairs. Transportation troubles are a stickler for him. That he will meet these problems I have no doubt, but we, as consumers, should be fully cognizant of the fact that he is doing his best."
