TO DO RIGHT BRINGS PEACE AND HAPPINESS

CHAPTER CXXVI.

The summer came and went. Our garden was a constant source of pleasure as well as profit. Robert helped me before and after school and through the vacation with my flowers so they also were cared for as they should be. Neil rose early and worked an hour in the garden before he went into town. He was happier, healthier than he had been since the first years of our marriage and did not hesitate to say so. We had bought a lot, and were paying for it as fast as possible. We had decided upon a plan for our house, and were so happy over it that we often laughed at ourselves for being so foolish. "Just like a couple of kids," Neil declared.

Neil Rayburn had bought the lot next us, and they would also build a house which would look well next to us. I had cautioned them about building too elaborately or we should be dwarfed. Many evenings that winter we gave to talking of our new home, or our plans for Robert and his little sister who had arrived in the late autumn, and whom Robert adored.

Neil was making good in adjusting the affairs of the business, "getting on his feet again," he said. Mr. Frederick had not come East for months. He left everything to Neil. This entire confidence he displayed did more to give Neil back his self respect than any other thing could have done. He was growing brighter, more like his old self. Some of the boyishness was noticeable at times, and I fairly gloated over it. It was the old Neil I had married coming back to me, the best part of him.

By spring we had paid for the lot, and started building. What a constant source of pleasure it was to watch the little home grow. Every night when dinner was over Neil and I walked over to see what had been accomplished during the day. It made no difference that I had a keen Elsie in her car, over in the morning. I was just as interested in going again. It seemed to me that never was a home so longingly looked for, so eagerly awaited as was that six room house on Long Island. We were to pay a little down, then some as rent, the rest on a mortgage which Neil Rayburn had taken at 5 per cent. That made it easy for us, and allowed us to "buy what was necessary to furnish it. We moved in for Christmas. And never were two people more, thankful than we Neil and I.

"It's quite different from the New York home, Bab," he said on Christmas morning. It was our present to each other.

"But I shall love it far more, Neil. We are going to be so happy here. And when it is all paid for we will buy better furniture. One piece at a time until we have it all to our liking."

"What a little executive you are," he answered smiling, and bending down to kiss me. "Here is a letter from Frederick. I forgot it for a moment. The postman just left it."

We stood together as he opened it. I read it with him, then he read it aloud while we both let fall a few grateful tears.

"Dear Friends: I wish you a very merry Christmas. I have planned for you to receive this on that day. I enclose a contract for next year for you for Forbes; and a check for the wife and children. Buy them something they want, but don't really need. Barbara has gone without the pretty things—women love so long get her something really foolish—as she may think. Now I have something to tell you. Robert said I should be third with him because I had no boy of my own. I shall look after him, his education, etc. And if he outlives me make him my heir.

"I shall never marry." There was much more, but of interest only to us, until the close when he said: "Many men have gone through the deep water Forbes, you among them. But I am proud to call you friend; proud to have you associated in business with me. Experience is a hard teacher, but sometimes her work is so well done that one forgets the hardness in time because of the results. I believe you are a better, a bigger man, because of what happened." Then he wished us all a merry Christmas, and closed.

"Hadn't you better look at the contract?" I asked as Neil stood holding it in his hand. It was for ten thousand dollars, because you are worth it to the business, not because of friendship; he had added, so making Neil supremely happy. The check for Robert and me was for five hundred dollars. I wanted to put it toward the house, but Neil said "no" he would buy me the brooch I had so admired in Jewellers window the last time I was in town. And for Robert he bought him a meccano outfit he long had desired intensely.

"Right living, doing all one can seem to bring its own reward," Neil said as we sat together after the children were in bed. "I thank God every day of my life that he gave me the chance to be a man in spite of my mistakes."

"And I thank Him for you, my babies, and my beautiful home," and we bade each other good night on our first Christmas in our new home. A happy, thankful, man and woman; a loving husband and wife.

The End.

Jane Phelps' next story, "Sandra, The Jealous," you will find to be a superb one. "A young, untried girl is a good deal like a book with its leaves uncut," writes Jane Phelps in her newest novel. "It may be she will be interesting—or that his thoughts will wander because of a sameness in the story, which bores him. Very young women are so anxious to be everything all at once that they leave no page unturned, nothing fresh and new to stir a man's jaded appetite." Sandra Courtney was this type and Irma Barton was, oh, so very different. Sandra was just eighteen. Irma had been through the harrowing mill of experience and emerged with no illusions but with startling depths of character.

Sandra had vowed never to wed a man who had been married before. And yet Everett Graham, rich and handsome, forty-one and a widower, persuaded her to marry him. She put aside the thought "To be a second wife seemed like having a warmed-over dinner." She was thwarted by her chum that the ghost of the first wife would haunt her. She didn't love Everett in the overwhelming fashion that novels painted, but that sort of love would come, in time, she felt.

Did it come? And did she have reason to be jealous of that earlier wife? Read her solution of "Youth and Middle Age." Jane Phelps has produced her best, thus far, in this story of "Sandra, The Jealous," which starts in tomorrow morning's issue.

ASTONISHED THE CADDY

The caddy who was carrying his clubs was a new lad—at least new to him—possessed of many freckles and a face wholly devoid of expression.

Noticing that the caddy never once smiled nor sneered at his employer's bad strokes, the player after a time began to take quite a fancy to him.

At the end of the round he said, in the hope doubtless of some sort of compliment, "I have been so busy lately that I am quite out of practice. That is why I am in such poor form today."

The caddy gazed at him incredulously for a second or two, and then replied, "Gordelup! Then you 'ave played golf before?"

A handy thing in the kitchen is a box of small change with which to pay the milkman, etc.

To Prevent Appendicitis

Here is the Experience of a Man Who Escaped the Surgeon's Knife.

You hear almost daily of some one going to the hospital for an operation for appendicitis. Do you know of any one who was ever really well afterwards?

Besides the risk and expense of the operation, the results are usually disappointing. For this reason alone, it is well worth while to try to avoid appendicitis by keeping the digestive system in healthful condition.

Many have written us about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills as a preventive and cure for appendicitis. This letter is a fair sample of the cases described.

Mr. John Poole, R. R. No. 5, Dresden, Ont., writes: "I was taken very sick with severe pains and cramps in my stomach. I called in a doctor, who said I had appendicitis in the worst form, and my case was very serious. He gave me medicine, which relieved me at that time, but I was far from being cured. He said I would have to go through an operation before I would be well, but this I did not wish to do. One day in looking through Dr. Chase's Almanac I saw that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were recommended for appendicitis if taken in time, so I thought I would try them. I took them regularly for two years, and now I am perfectly cured. I can do all kinds of hard work without any trouble. I would not be without Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in the house under any consideration, for I can truly say that they will do just what is claimed of them."

Perhaps the one greatest rule of health that which calls for daily movement of the bowels. With this program in effect there is no danger from appendicitis or similar dangerous diseases.

Chronic constipation of the bowels is cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills because they get the liver in healthful working order. In other words, they get at the cause of the trouble and remove it, thereby effecting thorough and lasting benefit.

KENSINGTON RACES

The Kensington Driving Park Association are putting their track in first class condition for their race on Wednesday, July 9th. Three races will be staged and purses aggregating $700 will be put up for the fast ones on that date.

It is the intention of the management to put on a second race on Wednesday, August 27th and purses to the amount of $900 will be put up for this race.

As an extra inducement that fast time will be made on this track this summer J. J. Snook & Co., through their representative Mr. R. T. Moore, Kensington have offered a genuine wool horse suit to be given to the winner of the last race. This track provided he breaks the P. E. I. track record.

As this is supposed to be the fastest track on the island and as there is abundance of speed here this year, several of the horsemen have signified their intention of taking this suit home with them.

Remember the date of the first race Wednesday, July 9th. Hot coffee, sandwiches, beans and bread will be for sale on the grounds. Ice cream will be served, a well stocked saloon will be on the grounds and a general good time is in store for those who attend.

LONDON: June 22.—Captain John Alcock and Lieutenant Arthur W. Brown, the airmen who made the first non-stop flight from North America to Ireland, were entertained at a luncheon at the Hotel Savoy today by the Daily Mail, at which the trans-Atlantic prize of £10,000, offered by the newspaper, was presented to the aviators. Those attending the dinner included Winston Spencer Churchill, Secretary of War; others members of the British Cabinet, the Earl of Reading, U. S. Ambassador Davis representatives of the British and American army and navy, and the Lord Mayors of London and Manchester.

Harry G. Hawker and Lieut. Commander Grewe, who failed in their attempt at a non-stop flight across the Atlantic, also were present.

HORSE NOTES.

Mr. Henry Wood of Vernon River has recently purchased from W. W. Crosby of Cornwall the young prize winning stallion "Keppoch Baron." As will be seen by his ad he is of the choicest breeding and will undoubtedly prove a decided acquisition to the breeders of that section.

Never forget that an attractive-looking table means far more to the appetite than a dull one.
