OFF COLOUR? HOW IS YOUR LIVER?

Wake up your Liver Bile —Without Calomel

Your liver's a very small organ, but it certainly can put your digestive and eliminative organs out of kilter, by refusing to pour out its daily two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels

You won't completely correct such a condition by taking salts, oil, mineral water, laxative candy or chewing gum, or roughage. When they've moved your bowels they're through—and you need a liver stimulant.

Carter's Little Liver Pills will soon bring back the sunshine into your life. They're purely vegetable. Safe. Sure. Ask for them by name. Refuse substitutes. 25c at all druggists. 48

The Double Act

A Romance of the Theatre
BY MARION TOMLINSON

Late that evening a very weary and uncared for youngster knocked at Nell's landing door. Nell flew to open it, and with no word of surprise, for she half knew what she should see, took the youngster in her arms.

But she wept at the sight of Rosemary's hair.

"Oh, my dear," she sobbed. "What have you done! All that lovely hair of yours. There was never anything so beautiful in the world, and there never will be again."

"Oh, I don't know," said Rosemary, lying back contently in the armchair her friend had placed for her near the fire. "It's growing out already. It's a nuisance, I have to keep re-dyeing the roots. But if I should want to let it grow out again it wouldn't take so very long. First I'd have a shingle, then I'd have a bob, and then if I wanted to have headaches again, I'd let it grow still further."

She spoke lightly, not because she was untouched by her friend's distress, but because she instinctively kept all her forces from emotional waste. There was only a week now, till the first night of Antony's play. And Rosemary, between the unaccustomed rough life in Bethnal Green, and the strenuous weeks of rehearsal, was very tired indeed.

Nell, scanning her face with affectionate eyes, saw this and refrained from further comment on the havoc Rosemary had made of the beauty of which Nell had always been so proud.

"Tea, darling," she said, "a big cup of hot, strong tea. And then you shall tell me all you wish to and no more."

"I'll tell you all about it, Nellie," answered Rosemary gratefully, accepting the cup. "I couldn't let you know before because things were so uncertain. You see I'd burned all my boats, and yet I wasn't at all sure I could do what I hoped. You know I love Antony Carson."

"Yes, I know," said Nell.

"Well, he was as considerate as he could be of my feelings, but he told me what he thought of the work I was doing for Grenoble, dressing myself up every night and showing myself off."

Nell made an impatient gesture.

"Oh, yes, Nellie, that was exactly what I was doing. And Antony was right to tell me he hated it. It would have been worse if he'd just assumed that I was not good for anything else," said the girl loyally. "In the end he did begin to assume that, and that was what made me desperate to prove to him—and to myself—that I was an artist really. But one never learns to swim if one clings to the pier—so I just cut loose."

"You look dreadfully tired now, darling," said Nell. "Couldn't you have let me come to take care of you?"

"No, I had to go through with it on my own," said Rosemary. "But now I think there is no doubt I have the part safely, and I'd like to be really fit and rested for the first night. May I stay with you, Nell? I'll get my first salary cheque soon, now."

"Don't worry about salary cheques," said Nell. "Grenoble insisted on paying me after you left, so I've plenty."

With a long sigh Rosemary relaxed further into her chair. "It's good to be here, Nellie. I did long for the fleshpots of Egypt while I was in Bethnal Green."

Nell looked about her dingy bedsitting room with a short laugh.

"Not much fleshpots about this place compared with the house where Marigold lived," she remarked.

"But compared with where young Les lived with Mrs. 'Icks, oh, Nell."

Nell looked at her friend, and then bent down suddenly to kiss her cheek, a demonstration rare with her.

"I'm going to take care of you day and night from now on. Have you got into your dressing rooms at the theatre yet?"

"No," answered Rosemary. "But luckily for us, the play that is running there now closes this week, so we will be able to move into our dressing rooms on Monday. Why?"

"Because I'm coming down with you as your dresser. It's enough for me to know that Dolores Monclair is in the company to know that something underhand is likely to crop up every minute. I won't be happy now unless I'm on the spot all the time."

"But would a slum boy have a dresser?" remonstrated Rosemary. "Remember I must continue to be just what I've seemed to the company all along."

"Doesn't matter whether he would or not, this slum boy is going to have a dresser, who'll keep an eye on Dolores Monclair and anyone else she suspects. Besides, I think it will look all right. After all, you've got second lead in the show. Have you been given a dressing room to yourself?"

Rosemary sat up suddenly. "Heavens! I hadn't thought of that!"

"You see, you do need old Nellie" chuckled the older woman. "How would you like to be asked to dress with the comedian? You must speak to Atkinson about it tomorrow. It is your right, as second lead."

"I'll speak to Antony," said Rosemary. "He's been so good to me, Nell."

Antony had indeed been good. Something that he would not admit to himself, something in the wide frank eyes that were not so deep a blue in the brown face, something about an occasional tone in the warm husky voice reminded him of eyes and a voice he was trying to forget.

"If all had been well," he said to himself sometimes, "and if we had had a son, he might have been like this in years to come. Only, of course, he would have had advantages." The idea grew on him that perhaps he might even yet give to this eager youngster what he would have liked to give to a son. "I could get him a tutor" he thought. "He is so quick to learn. Then he might go to the University. He and I could be such pals."

And Rosemary, going contentedly off to sleep, tucked in as of old by Nell, was thinking of the weeks of companionship her disguise had brought her. "We could have been such pals," she sighed.

No Depression In Tourist Trade

(Canadian Press)

SYDNEY, N. S., March 9.—Depression or not, Cape Breton entertained more tourists last summer than in any previous season. The Island's Tourist Association announces that the number of automobiles crossing the Strait of Canso during June, July and August was 1,400 greater than in any other corresponding period.

Double Drowning Mystery Cleared

(Canadian Press)

YARMOUTH, N. S., March 9.—Mystery surrounding a double drowning was partially cleared up today with discovery in the icy Tusket River of the body of Clarence Glode, 13, missing since his seven-year-old brother, Gordon, drowned in the river on February 22.

Searching parties who had been patiently dragging the waters of the river since the day the brothers left home together found the boy's body lying in shallow water today. The younger brothers' body had been taken from the river the day after the disappearance.

They had, presumably, met death at the same time, although no theory as to how both boys came to fall into the water together has been advanced.

VERIGIN SEEKS INVESTIGATION

If Demands Are Not Met Will Lead Nude Parade.

WINNIPEG, March 9.—(C.P.)—Peter Verigin, spiritual and temporal ruler of the Doukhobors, will request a Royal Commission to investigate the whole Doukhobor situation, he said in an interview here tonight. If his request is refused, he added, he and 16,000 followers will parade in the nude from their Western settlements to Winnipeg.

"All the honest people of the west will be with us," Verigin continued heatedly, speaking through the medium of two interpreters, but I don't think you will find Premier Anderson of Saskatchewan among these folk."

The Community Leader, who is on his way to his home from Halifax where he was released last week following a fight to prevent his deportation to Russia, made it clear he has no animosity against the Dominion of Canada. He had no thought of suing the Government for their recent action in attempting to deport him. "Justice will prevail, that is my satisfaction" he declared.

Asked if he was still the leader of the Doukhobors, despite rumors to the contrary, Verigin laughed boisterously as the question was put by the interpreter. In a rippling torrent of words, accentuated with frequent gestures, he declared he is leader spiritually and temporally, and always will be. J. P. Shukin, Vice-President of the community, had been leader only while he (Verigin) was under sentence of deportation.

The community leader left here tonight for his home at Verigin, Sask., with the intention of visiting his wife and mother and relieving their anxiety and the anxiety of his people.

Plans for a wholesale migration of Doukhobors from Canada are still being considered, Verigin declared, but he shrugged his shoulders and quoted the Russian equivalent of the English proverb, "man proposes, God disposes."

CREAM RICE PUDDING

4 tablespoons rice — 2¼ cups St. Charles Milk
½ cup sugar — 1¾ cups water
½ teaspoon salt — Nutmeg

Wash rice thoroughly, then add with the sugar and salt to the milk diluted with water. Pour into a buttered baking dish and add a sprinkling of nutmeg. Set the dish in a pan of hot water and bake three hours in a slow oven (300°F.), stirring several times the first hour to prevent rice from settling to bottom. This is just one of the many practical recipes from our new cook book "The Good Provider." This book tells you how you can make nearly 200 delicious dishes with St. Charles Milk. CONFESSES TO BURNING OF ST. JOHN ARENA

(Canadian Press)

EDMONTON, March 9.—Identity of Emmuel Dickins Prime, held here on his confession of burning Saint John, N.B., Arena four years ago, as the same Prime whose home is in Fairville Plateau, N.B., was established today with the arrival of telegraphic description.

Prime, according to word from the East, was a student at the Saint John High School at the time of the fire and later worked at a Saint John pulp mill. Some time ago he left to go to Vancouver, and his relatives in Saint John had their last letter from him from that point two weeks ago.

MRS. JOHN BROWN

There passed peacefully away to her eternal home on February 16th, 1933, Mrs. John Brown of South Granville at the age of 64 years. The deceased had been in failing health for some time but her death came as a great shock to the community in which she lived.

She was of a quiet and loving disposition and was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was a devoted member of the Roman Catholc Church and was visited by her pastor, Rev. W. V. MacDonald during her illness. There are left to mourn besides a sorrowing husband two sisters, Miss Abbie Fraser, Glynde River, who tenderly nursed her during her last illness and Mrs. James Murphy, Charlottetown, and a sister, Mrs. W. Hagan, who pre-deceased her some years ago and two brothers, Wallace of Vancouver and Allan of Quebec.

Her funeral which was held on Monday morning to St. Anne's Church, Hope River, was largely attended.

The pall bearers were: James Murphy, John Hagan, Leaming Murphy, Charles MacKenzie, Norbert Murphy, George Murphy.

Requiescat in Pace.

The last man I fought is in hospital," said the heavyweight boxer. He's got two black eyes, a broken jaw, a dislocated elbow, and several teeth missing.

Good gracious! said his friend You must have punished him severely.

Not me! ejaculated the boxer. He got that from his wife for keeping back her share of the purse.

INVITED TO PARTICIPATE IN LEAGUE

United States And Soviet Invited To Discuss Sino-Jap Conflict.

(Canadian Press)

MOSCOW, March 9.—The Soviet Government tonight refused to participate in the League of Nations consultative commission in the Sino-Japanese conflict because of what was termed the "hostility" of the majority of the participants toward the Soviet Union. Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff declared in a note to the League that it was impossible "for the moment to join in the decisions of the League when 13 out of the 22 participants in the consultative commission maintain no relations with the U. S. S. R. and therefore are hostile to it."

"Obviously," the note continued "such a committee hardly would be able to coordinate its actions with the Soviet Union, since the latter has no possibility of negotiating with a majority of the members and separately with such of them whose interests coincide greatly with our own."

Stressing the Moscow Government's policy of neutrality in the present conflict, the note continued: "The Soviet Government will always solidly support the actions and suggestions of international bodies and separate governments aiming to solve the conflict and to safeguard peace in the Far East."

Advisory Committee

An advisory committee of 21 members was named by the League of Nations February 24 to serve as an executive group in handling the Sino-Japanese dispute. The United States and Soviet Russia were invited to participate in this work.

The position of the United States was set forth February 25 in a note disptached to the League. Without definitely accepting the League's invitation, the note expressed the "general indorsement" of the United States of the principles for settlement recommended by the League.

Georgetown

Capt. Wittig returned to Cherry Valley on Thursday.

Capt. Kelly, C. A., has returned to resume his parochial duties in Georgetown.

The Lenten season opened on Ash Wednesday. Evening prayer and the Communation service with sermon was held in the Church of the Holy Trinity and these Lenten services are to continue each Wednesday evening with Question box.

At Matins on Sunday, Capt. Kelly spoke on the season of Lent and its relation to those professing Christianity; also on the character of Judas Iscariot. Judas was the great character connected with the greatest crime in the world. When Judas saw the outcome of his actions he repented and condemned himself "I have sinned." It is ourselves that condemn ourselves, not God.

At Evensong Capt. Kelly spoke on the unclean man in the temple. He was possessed of a devil. The devil rebelled within the man calling on Christ to let him alone. This is a great testimony to the divinity of Christ. The fiend asked Christ what He had to do with him. It is mankind Christ came to save. Thank God it is for us. The Father so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son. We need to receive the spirit of Christ, we need him pervading our lives and removing all the Satanic agencies within us and no one is more willing to dwell with us than Christ if we but surrender our lives.—A.
