CHAPTER VI

Before the stranger reached her, she had time to see that he was a thin, unimpressive type with reddish face and tiny sandy mustache, neatly clipped. His features were small and his blue eyes twinkled. His plain gray business suit, which lacked all trace of style, was in need of pressing and his wide commonsense shoes were dusty and scratched.

"Well, Frills, how's the beautiful bean feeling today? Golly, you women are lucky, the way you can get thrown around and not get hurt! Now a man, who has to use his head, would have been just the lucky to get a crack that would put him out of business completely."

Joyce smiled up at him easily. This man was not in love with her, she knew instinctively. He was friendly enough, but impersonal.

"Oh, is that so?" she retorted. "Well, the Lord must have thought women's brains more important than men's, if he protected them so much better."

"Ha! Well, I haven't time for any arguments on the equality of the sexes now, just dropped in to see what you looked like so I can send Nell a wire that everything is O.K."

Of course! This was the doctor!

"Well, I'm all right," she replied, and then it occurred to her that she had better not be too well if she wished to stave off the hordes of friends who were trying to draw her back into their activities. "But it shock me up and I'm going to cut out some of the jazz for this week anyhow . . . You might tell people it's by your orders."

"Ha! You don't expect anybody would believe that you were obeying any orders of mine, do you? When have you ever taken my advice, young lady?"

He stared at her with such a sudden keen searching look in his blue eyes that Joyce blushed deeper than ever.

"Advice comes natural to a doctor Frills," he went on. "If you are going to take advice, I wish you'd take some I've given you long ago. Quit this excessive smoking! Look at the way you fidget."

"But I haven't smoked since day before yesterday," retorted Joyce triumphantly, "so it can't be that?"

"It can't? Whew! No wonder you're nervous! Don't you know you can't cut it out all at once? Not a girl with your highly strung nervous system, who's been smoking at the terrific rate you have! Use a little commonsense. Here, take this. If you want to cut out smoking, do it gradually." He handed her a cigarette with a decisive gesture which made refusal impossible.

Joyce took it, her hand shaking. But before she had even raised it to her mouth,they were interrupted by the arrival of Roxie. "Dr. Ellison, the Gates Hospital wants to speak to you, sir."

The doctor jumped to his feet. "Thanks, Roxie, just tell them I'll be right there. Gooy-bye, Frills, I'll drop in again later," and he was off without a backward glance.

Joyce drew a breath of relief. "Another one killed off! That message was sheer luck. I couldn't light this cigarette with him looking on," she murmured.

She successfully lighted the cigarette and puffed at it daintly. After a few moments, however, her attention was suddenly distracted by the approach of a woman. In her renewed agitation, Joyce swallowed a mouthful of smoke, which to her surprise she found herself expelling through her nostrils and mouth without any sensation of strangeness. Automatically her breathing apparatus was performing a familiar operation!

Fortified to meet another visitor, she rose to her feet and smiled greeting at the newcomer.

"Well, my dear Frills, what a fortunate child you are!"

Her caller, who seated herself without waiting for an invitation, was a woman about forty years old with a delicate skin still fine in texture. She had large pale blue eyes, a straight little nose, and a thin-lipped mouth whose corners dropped with a petulant, complaining expression. Her feet were shod in beautifully fitting white kid walking slippers. From the top of her head to her feet, Mrs. Paul Packard was immaculately well dressed and well groomed.

'If she affected Frills one-half as unpleasantly as she does me," thought Joyce, "she wouldn't be on speaking terms with me now, or else at least Frills would have put the fear of God into her."

"You escaped a very serious injury," went on the visitor. "Have you had Dr. Ellison make a thorough examination?"

"No, I haven't," replied Joyce. Her welcoming smile faded out, and sitting down again, she puffed at her cigarette, waiting in defensive silence. If this was Laurine, deliver her from any more in-laws!

"Well, I should certainly think he would have done it . . . I do wish you would consult him. I feel certain he would think a thorough internal examination the only safe thing to do after such an accident as yours . . . A stitch in time saves nine."

Joyce wanted to add, "And an apple a day keeps the doctor away," but she kept quiet, wondering how much longer Laurine would stick to this particular subject.

Laurine changed the subject. "Delphine sent her love to you and hopes you're feeling quite recovered from the accident and Paul said to tell you he'd probably run in sometime today. He's having lunch at the club with Otis Clark and a business friend from the city, and they're going to play golf all afternoon, with Art Belmain to make up a foursome."

It was nearly an hour later when Mrs. Paul Packard rose from the marble bench. She had touched on a multitude of subjects, ranging from the newest cold cream and its wonderful effects, to the details of the recent confinement of a Mrs. Wellman.

The effect of this call on Joyce was a wearily annoyed feeling that she had suffered more than the net results in the way of enlightening facts were worth.

"By the way, Delphine told me that she saw Arthur Maitland one night having dinner at the Palace with what she called a 'jazz baby' in a vermillion evening dress. And I heard from somebody else, though I won't repeat the name because if there's one thing I pride myself on, it's not spreading scandal or gossip —but it's a woman who spends a lot of her time in the city, and you know her almost as well as I do—that Maitland has two separate apartments in the city not just the one where the men have their stag parties. I think you ought to know those things because you're so careless about appearances and it's a crying shame the way you run around with a man like Arthur Maitland."

In the midst of the resentful fury that seized Joyce at the nerve of the woman for mixing into her private affairs she could not help feeling admiration for Laurine's courage. She had thought of Frills as a dynamic being who would not for a moment have tolerated the rebuke or advice of such a complacent upholder of middle-aged conventionalities. She herself was speechless, wholly unprepared and no match for Laurine's methods of attack. It occurred to her, however, that this information of the second apartment might be used later in her handling of Maitland, and she could not help being a little grateful to Laurine for furnishing her with any weapon.

Laurine, not waiting for the scarlet-faced Joyce to reply, went on calmly, "When you're a little older, my dear,and have had as much experience as I have of the world, you'll realize it's foolish to put any trust in a man who is so lacking in principle that he can deliberately compromise a married woman. Nine times out of ten, he won't be faithful to her, and when she's been made a fool of she'll find that she was only one of a number of other silly women. Arthur Maitland is no different from the rest. Well, I must run along now. And do come over soon, my dear. Paul and I are always glad to we come you, and no matter what happens, you must feel you have a refuge in our simple home . . ."

Joyce was left alone again, plunged into another whirl of emotions. "I'm getting so many new things to think about, so many angels all at once to this business of being Frill's Packard, that it makes me dizzy trying to fit them together. Whew, but Mrs. Paul Packard is a fearful and wonderful female! I'll bet all I have that she's telling every one she knows about Arthur Maitland's other apartment. If it weren't that it helped me find out more about life here I should have been bored to death by Laurine. . . ."

She picked up the letters again and re-read the ones from "Sophie" with a growing longing to see the baby. Fired by this feeling, she went into the house to hunt for Sophie's address. But there was no Sophie in the little pigskin book.

CHICKEN DINNERS

Nothing is more delicious than a well cooked chicken, whether broiled, fried or roasted. Proper cooking is essential, of course, to retain every bit of the delicate flavour of the chicken. A moderate cooking temperature for broiling, frying and for roasting is the secret of tender, juicy chicken, beautifully browned.

The flavours of bacon fat and butter are particularly good companions of chicken, and are well worth combining.

Here are the cooking methods suggested by the Consumer Section Marketing Service, Dominion Department of Agriculture:

Broiled Chicken

Select broilers weighing 1 1-2 to 2 pounds. Split down the back, clean and sprinkle with salt. Preheat broiler rack for 10 minutes. Place broilers, skin side down, on greased broiler rack, about 3 inches from heat. Brush with butter and broil 15 to 20 minutes. Turn. Brush skin side with butter and broil about 15 minutes longer, or until birds are nicely browned and tender.

Oven-cooked Broilers

Select broilers weighing 1 1-2 to 2 pounds. Split down the back, clean and sprinkle with salt. Place on a greased rack in shallow baking pan, skin side down. Brush with butter and cook in a moderate oven 350 degrees Fahrenheit, for 25 minutes. Turn and cook for 20 minutes or until birds are tender. The birds may then be brushed with butter and placed under the broiler flame for 5 minutes to improve the colour and flavour.

Fried Chicken

Select plump, young chickens weighing 2 to 3 pounds. Disjoint and cut birds into portions for serving. Dry and roll in flour seasoned with salt and pepper. Use a heavy frying pan with 1-8 inch on more melted butter or bacon fat. Add chicken and brown well on both sides, using moderate heat. Cover pan and finish frying chicken over low heat until tender. This will take 25 to 30 minutes.

Note: If top stove space is limited, after chicken is browned on both sides, the cooking may be completed in oven at 325 degrees F., using covered pan and allowing approximately 45 minutes in the oven.

Roast Chicken

Select A or B Milkfed chickens. Clean. Sprinkle inside of chicken with salt and fill loosely with well seasoned stuffing. Truss bird and place in uncovered roasting pan, breast side down. Roast in moderately slow oven, 325 degrees F., allowing 30 to 35 minutes per pound, dressed weight. A 5-pound chicken requires approximately 2 1-2 hours. Baste frequently during roasting with melted fat. Turn bird on back to brown uniformly during the last hour of roasting.

Note: Chickens may be satisfactorily roasted at 350 degrees F., allowing 20 to 25 minutes per pound, dressed weight, or approximately 1 3-4 hours for a 5-pound chicken. If roasting at this temperature, the birds should be basted more frequently. It is found that the shrinkage is slightly greater with the higher temperature.

In Memoriam

MRS. MINNIE FRASER MURRAY

On Tuesday, July 30th the funeral of Mrs. Minnie Fraser Murray, widow of the late William W. Murray of Fredericton, P. E. I., was held in the Pleasant Valley Church. The funeral was well attended and the Minister, Rev. Edward Milley, paid glowing tribute to Mrs. Murray's sustained interest in the "little church in the valley." It never wavered, although for the past twenty-four years she had resided with her daughter Mrs. Ernest Mitchell of Henniker, N. H., from whose home she died on July 23rd after a very brief illness. It was from this house also that a funeral service was held before the remains were taken to Prince Edward Island.

Accompanying the remains were Mr. and Mrs. Charles N. Flanders, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Mitchell, and Fraser Murray.

Mrs. Murray leaves to mourn two sons and two daughters, Mrs. Annie Mitchell, Mrs. Alecia Flanders and Fraser M. Murray of Henniker, N.H., and James Pope Murray of Meath Park, Saskatchewan. Also four granddaughters Mrs. Henry W. Stevens, Mrs. Irvin Gillingham and Miss Thelma Cochrane of Concord, N. H. and Sylvia Edwards of Henniker, N. H. L-483-8-12-1i.

POOR GIVE SAVINGS FOR BRITISH CAUSE

LONDON, Aug. 11.—(CP)—A poor woman's gift of £159 ($707) — and a working girl's entire savings, £100 ($445)—are but two of the generous offers which have been received by the National Savings Committee and the Red Cross respectively.

In a clumsily tied paper parcel the poor woman, who refused to give her name and any other identification, left £159 in old Treasury notes and a scrawled message which read, "Please will you share these notes for the Red Cross and to help the war."

The other case came from a working class girl who lent her entire savings £100 — to the government free of interest for the duration of the war. In her message she wrote: "I only wish I could give more, but I am only a working girl."
