FOR THE WOMAN READER

A CREED
Here is the truth in a little creed.
Enough for all the roads we go;
In Love is all the law we need.

—Edwin Markham.

DRESS LONG HAIR IN AN INDIVIDUAL STYLE

The woman with long hair should pay special attention to her fall coiffure. Modes for short hair have not changed to any great extent but, with the old-fashioned low buns becoming more and more extinct, coiffures for long hair take on new and decidedly individual notes.

The man point to remember is to keep a high smooth line across the back of your neck. An important American authority on coiffures says that wearing your hair too low on your neck has a tendency to drag down your appearance. As the corners of your mouth should turn up, so should your style of hair dress take an upward turn.

Buns, knots and sausage curls find no favor this fall. Not that you need to cut your long tresses if short hair is not becoming to you. The long ends may be done in a soft chignon—curl arrangements that bear no resemblance to the

Well-spaced Sound, Straight Teeth are built by BOTTLED SUNSHINE

One of the greatest gifts you can give your child is sound, straight teeth. And now—while your baby's permanent teeth are forming beneath the gums—is the time to ensure their sound development.

Every day in the year give your baby Bottled Sunshine—Squibb Cod-Liver Oil. Squibb's is absolutely guaranteed to supply an abundance not only of Vitamin D which builds good teeth and bones but also of Vitamin A which assists growth and builds up baby's resistance.

Health throughout life depends on good teeth. Start now and ensure sound teeth development in your baby by giving him Squibb's daily. It's economical, too, for Squibb's rich vitamin content makes it go farther than inferior oils. Always insist on Squibb's at your druggist.

Can Marriage Succeed On Love Alone? Dorothy Dix Thinks Thought And Effort Needed, Too

Love Alone Won't Make Marriage a Success; Love Can Be Cruel, and it Can be the Most Selfish Thing on Earth, and Even the Finest Love Won't Make Marriage to the Wrong Person Happy

A young girl said to me the other day: "Love is the only thing that matters in marriage. I think that if a man and woman love each other they will always be happy together and their marriage will be a success don't you?"

"No, I don't," I replied. "Love alone is no guarantee of happiness or success in marriage, for love isn't always kind or even livable. Some of the most grinding domestic tyrants in the world fairly worship the husbands and wives they victimize."

"Of course, love is essential to a happy and successful marriage. It is the bread and nectar of life without which we perish of hunger and thirst. Every heart cries out for its mate, that mysterious some one that, for some strange reason that we cannot explain even to ourselves, we set our affections upon and who answers every need of our souls and bodies."

"Without love marriage is cinders, ashes and dust, no matter if the man and woman bring to it virtue and loyalty and respect and consideration for each other and every high moral quality. A home without the flame of love burning on the altar is no more than a place where people eat and sleep, though it be a palace. It takes love to guide the chains that bind a man and woman together. It takes love to blind a man and woman to each other's faults, or make them see them as just interesting peculiarities because they are each other's."

"It takes love to take the bitterness out of the sacrifices that every husband and wife must make and make them sweet. It takes love to keep a man and woman perpetually interested in each other and keep them from getting on each other's nerves."

"But just love alone won't make marriage a success. It isn't enough just by itself. It takes a lot of things besides love to make a go of marriage and trying to run one on love alone is like trying to build a house without a foundation, or run a business on hot air. It is bound to end in a crash."

"It is because women are sold on this idea that love is everything, and that if they love their husbands enough it doesn't matter how they treat them that causes them to make the mistakes that wreck their marriages so often. Why, the very things that women do that kill their husbands' love and drive their husbands from them are nearly always inspired by love."

"For what is the jealousy that causes a woman to make scenes if her husband so much as speaks to another woman but the love that cannot endure even the suggestion that he could have eyes for any other woman but herself or find interest and amusement in any other woman's society."

"What is the nagging that torments a man half to death and that puts him through a questionnaire that is like being grilled by the third degree, except the love that makes her die a thousand deaths fearing that he might be run over by an automobile or eat something that would make him sick, and that makes the simplest act of his daily life more interesting and more important to her than the upheaval of a continent or the downfall of a nation would be?"

"And what is the wife's denial of every particle of personal freedom to her husband, her tagging him and never being willing for him to go off anywhere alone; her not being willing for him even to read his paper of an evening because it takes his attention from her, but the love that can never get enough of his society, the love that cannot be satisfied without monopolizing him?"

"Love can be cruel and it can be the most selfish thing on earth. Nor can it be depended upon to last. It can sicken and die of neglect. It can be slain by jar and fret and squabbles and squabbles."

"It can fade away and vanish as imperceptibly as the dew on the grass in the morning through the changes that time makes in a character, not . . . tell him of 'that hussy's advent?'"

"She had taken Virginia's dollar it is true, but, according to her code of ethics, that involved no special loyalty to the designing creature. Her master went on scribbling, untouched tea beside him."

"Yes, he'd be heaps better with a wife to look after him, thought the old woman, but never one like that Miss Virginia Dale, or whatever high-flown name she called herself. She was no good, not she. Hadn't the third housemaid at the Towers—who was Nannie's granddaughter, and even though a bit flighty, like all young gals were nowadays, had good commonsense—hadn't Minnie told her grandma that Miss Dale was no real lady, despite her airs?"

"And it was plain to see, the way she chased young Mr. Armstrong, and he so unsuspecting . . . He looked up now, smiling abstractedly at her."

"Well, what is it, Nannie? Anything you want to say?" "Nothing sir, except that this morning a lady called to see you. I told her as I didn't know rightly when you'd be back."

"Who was she?" "For a foolish moment he hoped it might be Prudence!" "The lady from the Towers, sir. The one with the grand clothes and perfume."

"Disapproval was in every line of Nannie's old nut-cracker face, Peter could scarcely keep a smile back. "That's all right, Nannie. You needn't wait." He nodded her away. "And don't admit any callers, port to the United States last month was $2,324,888 and to the United Kingdom $47,182."

The man and woman who in their youth were ardent lovers may find that at middle age they have simply lost their taste for each other and have not a single thought or interest in common.

"And so just love isn't enough to marry on, for marriage isn't merely a sentimental journey on which you are sure to have a grand and glorious time just because you are enamored of your travelling companion. It is a business partnership in which two people are investing their whole present and future well being, and whether it prospers or falls depends upon their putting their backs into it as well as their hearts."

"The success of a marriage depends not only upon a young couple being in love with each other, but upon their being in love with the right woman and man."

"No amount of loving a nervous, neurotic woman with a temper that is set on a hair trigger and that goes off if you jar her; no amount of loving an extravagant woman whose bills keep her husband's nose to the grindstone all his life; no amount of loving a woman who is too lazy to make a comfortable home, can make marriage a success to a man. And no amount of loving a drunkard, or a philanderer, or a gambler, or a ne'er-do-well is going to make marriage a success to a woman."

"And so, my dear," I said to the girl, "don't delude yourself into thinking that love alone is enough to marry on. It is the main spring of marriage, but not the whole works, and it takes a lot of things besides affection to make the wheels go around smoothly for thirty or forty years of wedlock." DOROTHY DIX.

A Morning Smile

KINDLY COUNSEL On a visit to New York, Mischa Elman, the violinist, told a story of his early childhood. "When I was very small indeed," he said, "I played at a reception at a Russian Prince's, and for an urchin of —, I flatter myself I rattled off Beethoven's 'Kreutzer Sonata' finely. This sonata has several long and impressive rests in it. In one of these rests a motherly old lady leaned forward, patted my shoulder, and said: "Play something you know, dear!"

THOUGHTFUL PATIENT

One winter night, when the ground was covered with sleet and the rain was freezing as it fell, the old doctor received a very late call from a family living away on the other side of the city. It was after 1 o'clock when he left home, and his horse—this was in the old days—slid all the way to the patient's house. He got there about 3 o'clock and found that a girl in the household had a severe cold. It was nothing dangerous. "How long has she had it?" asked the doctor. "Three days," answered the mother. "Why didn't you call me in the daytime?" asked the doctor. Then came the answer, which made this the favorite story of the Medical Society for many, many years: "We are poor people, and we aren't able to pay very much, so we thought we would call you when you weren't busy."

THE COOK'S CORNER

Baked Squash Small squash 3 tablespoons shortening 2 tablespoons chopped onion 2 tablespoons chopped green pepper 1 teaspoon salt 1/2 teaspoon pepper 1/2 teaspoon paprika 1/2 cup fine bread crumbs Cut squash in pieces, pare and cook in boiling, salted water to cover about 30 minutes or until tender. Daintiness With Chic Styles ILLUSTRATED DRESSMAKING LESSON FURNISHED WITH EVERY PATTERN BY ANNABELLE WORTHINGTON

Isn't it smart? It is so simple in cut with a subtle difference that makes it so distinctive. Carried out in eel-gray faille crepe silk, coral-pink crepe smartly peeps 'neath the bolera jacket effect. And let me tell you about the new craft touch in fagoting made with stripes of self-fabric. See small illustrations. The pattern envelope explains in detail exactly how to add this interesting trim to the dress. Soft hairy woolen mixtures in Persian-rose, hunter-green, fawn-brown, etc., are youthfully smart for school, college or town.
