

MILTON TO CLEAN FALSE TEETH!

Milton is the one sure and harmless way of getting your false teeth really clean—the whole plate spotless and free from germs, gold parts glittering, no sign of 'film' or food—ask your dentist. Get a bottle (35¢, 65¢, or $1.) from any dealer, and try one of these methods.

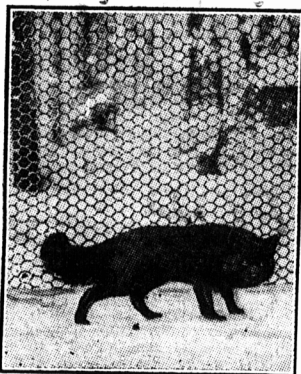

The Overnight Method. If you take out your plate at night, add half-a-teaspoonful of Milton to the glass or cup of cold water in which you leave it. In the morning rinse it in clean cold water.

The Morning Method. If you sleep with your false teeth in, put them, on rising, into a glass containing equal parts of Milton and warm water (just enough fluid to cover the plate.) When you are dressed, take them out, rinse and wipe.

IT CLEANS THEM WHILE YOU SLEEP OR DRESS

NOTICE

Mr. Jeffrey's of New York Laboratories has arranged with me to accept orders for their new Tracheal Syringe, an instrument invented for curing lungworms in foxes.

Among the users of this outfit are the U. S. Experimental Fur Farm, and many large ranchers who have found it a valuable aid in the control of lungworms.

Any average rancher can administer this treatment efficiently, and if interested may receive full information by applying to M. E. McLENNAN, R. E. No. 7, Charlottetown, P. E. I.

MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 70 FOLLOWING DESTINY'S FINGER

"You've simply got to go with us, Dot. There isn't any other way!" Lila, dressed for traveling, stood in Dorothy's studio and implored her.

"It's the last favor I'll ever ask of you!" she begged.

Dorothy's cool glance went to her watch.

"There's scarcely half an hour before your train. Yes, I could make it. But what earthly good will this postponement do, Lila?"

"I don't know," confessed Lila desperately. "But I'm just like a condemned criminal; I won't give up all hope until they lead me to my execution."

Dorothy rose from her drawing-board and quietly slipped off her smock. She rang for her maid.

"Pack a bag quickly, please. Put in changes for several days."

She turned to Lila: "I'll be ready in ten minutes. Have you your car, or shall I call a taxi?"

Lila stared at her admiringly. "I have my car. Oh, Dot, there isn't another girl like you in all the world!"

In ten minutes Dorothy appeared, wearing a smart beige tailleur and a little hat of rose-colored straw. She carried an expensive-looking dressing-case.

"Ready," she announced, with a faint smile.

In the car, she said to Lila: "Perhaps I haven't mentioned it—but your Captain Farquhar and I parted on rather strained terms. I don't believe he'll be very glad to see me, and, as for Herbert—well, it seems to me that I'll be decidedly de trop all around!"

Lila squeezed her fingers. "What do you care? You don't give a snap of your fingers for either one of them."

Dorothy made no reply, but a queer little smile played around her pretty lips, as she watched the edifying crowds through the window.

Herbert was waiting impatiently at the station.

"I was afraid you wouldn't make it," he began, as Lila hurried up to him. Then he caught sight of Dorothy and stopped dead. A frown of displeasure, or perhaps, it was disappointment, gathered.

Lila drew him aside. "Listen, darling, Dot is going, too, because there's a man at Saratoga who—she stopped, threw him a gay little smile, and winked significantly.

"I see," Herbert relaxed a trifle. "All right—only I'd wanted this little holiday alone with you."

"Why are we going to Saratoga?" asked Lila meekly, as they made their way to the train.

Herbert explained graciously: "I've never told you, darling, but I own a couple of race-horses. Vero of them has done anything much until recently, when one proved a veritable dark horse and came across in fine style. By the merest fluke, I had a chance yesterday to enter him in a race at Saratoga tomorrow in place of a favorite. Since nobody knows much about my entry, there's a fine chance that, with the odds well set, we can make a big clean-up."

Lila's gaze met Dorothy's.

Herbert's horse was undoubtedly the one on which Jack Farquhar hoped to win money!

"What irony!" murmured Dorothy in Lila's ear, as they climbed aboard the train.

The porter conducted them to a drawing-room. "I took this, hoping to be alone with you," Herbert told Lila reproachfully, while Dorothy joined them.

"I'm so sorry, darling. But you wouldn't want Dot not to have her chance, would you? And this man—she" she admonished, as Dorothy joined them.

When Herbert had gone to purchase a last-minute newspaper, Lila drew Dorothy down on the seat beside her and explained hurriedly: "I've told Herbert that you're going with us because of a man."

And the man, Dot, will be Jack, if we bump into him."

Dorothy colored violently. "Lila, have you utterly lost your senses? You're getting all of us into a worse and worse situation."

"Don't you suppose I know it?" groaned Lila. "I'm simply going round in circles now, without any definite plan."

Herbert came back, his mouth in a tight line.

The Varneys are in the parlor-car. I rather thought he'd want to see my horse run. Nether of them spoke to me."

Despite the summer warmth, Lila shivered. She had been congratulating herself that, calamitous as the situation was that took Herbert to Saratoga at this time, there was a silver rift in the black clouds. May Varney, at least, couldn't carry out her threat to go to Herbert with the true story of that diamond ring.

And here was May on the same train, bound for the same place?

Dorothy, to whom Lila had detailed May's threat, caught the significance of the situation and rose. "I'll go out and gossip with May," she said.

She closed the drawing-room door carefully behind her and made her way down the swaying aisle of the speeding train. She could see the glittering ornament on May Varney's hat above and white linen edge of a chair at the far end of the car.

"Miss Caine!" She stopped, swaying unsteadily with the motion of the train.

CHURCH SERVICES

TRINITY UNITED CHURCH

On rising to make the announcements at the morning service in Trinity United Church Sunday, Rev. Hammond Johnson expressed the hearty welcome of the congregation to Rev. Dr. Ramsay on his return from vacation and attendance at the General Council. Dr. Ramsay had enjoyed a months vacation chiefly in Nova Scotia, and at its close proceeded to Winnipeg where he served as a commissioner to the General Council of the United Church of Canada, the sessions of which extended from the 5th to the 15th of September instant. Dr. Ramsay was the preacher, his subject being the pre-eminence of Christ.

The key word of the first Council was Union; that of the second, organization. The third council, which has just been held, had a distinctive note of consecration. The Council opened with a sermon by the retiring Moderator, Rev. Dr. Endicott, who took as his text the words "Jesus Christ is Lord." In the inspiration of that truth the council continued its deliberations. The highest point in interest and emotion in all the sessions of the Council was the adoption of a resolution submitted jointly by the Board of Social Service and Evangelism and the Board of Religious Education, which called the Church to greater consecration in Christian life and service. "Gladly and humbly the commissioners stood with bowed heads to give assent to this resolution and in doing so dedicated themselves anew to Christ and his work that in them and through them His might have the pre-eminence."

Continuing, Dr. Ramsay stressed the thought of Christ's pre-eminence in the Church and its members, in our country, and throughout the world.

At the evening service, Rev. Hammond Johnson delivered a very practical and effective sermon upon a subject specially appropriate to the young people, large numbers of whom are very welcome auditors in this church each Sunday evening.

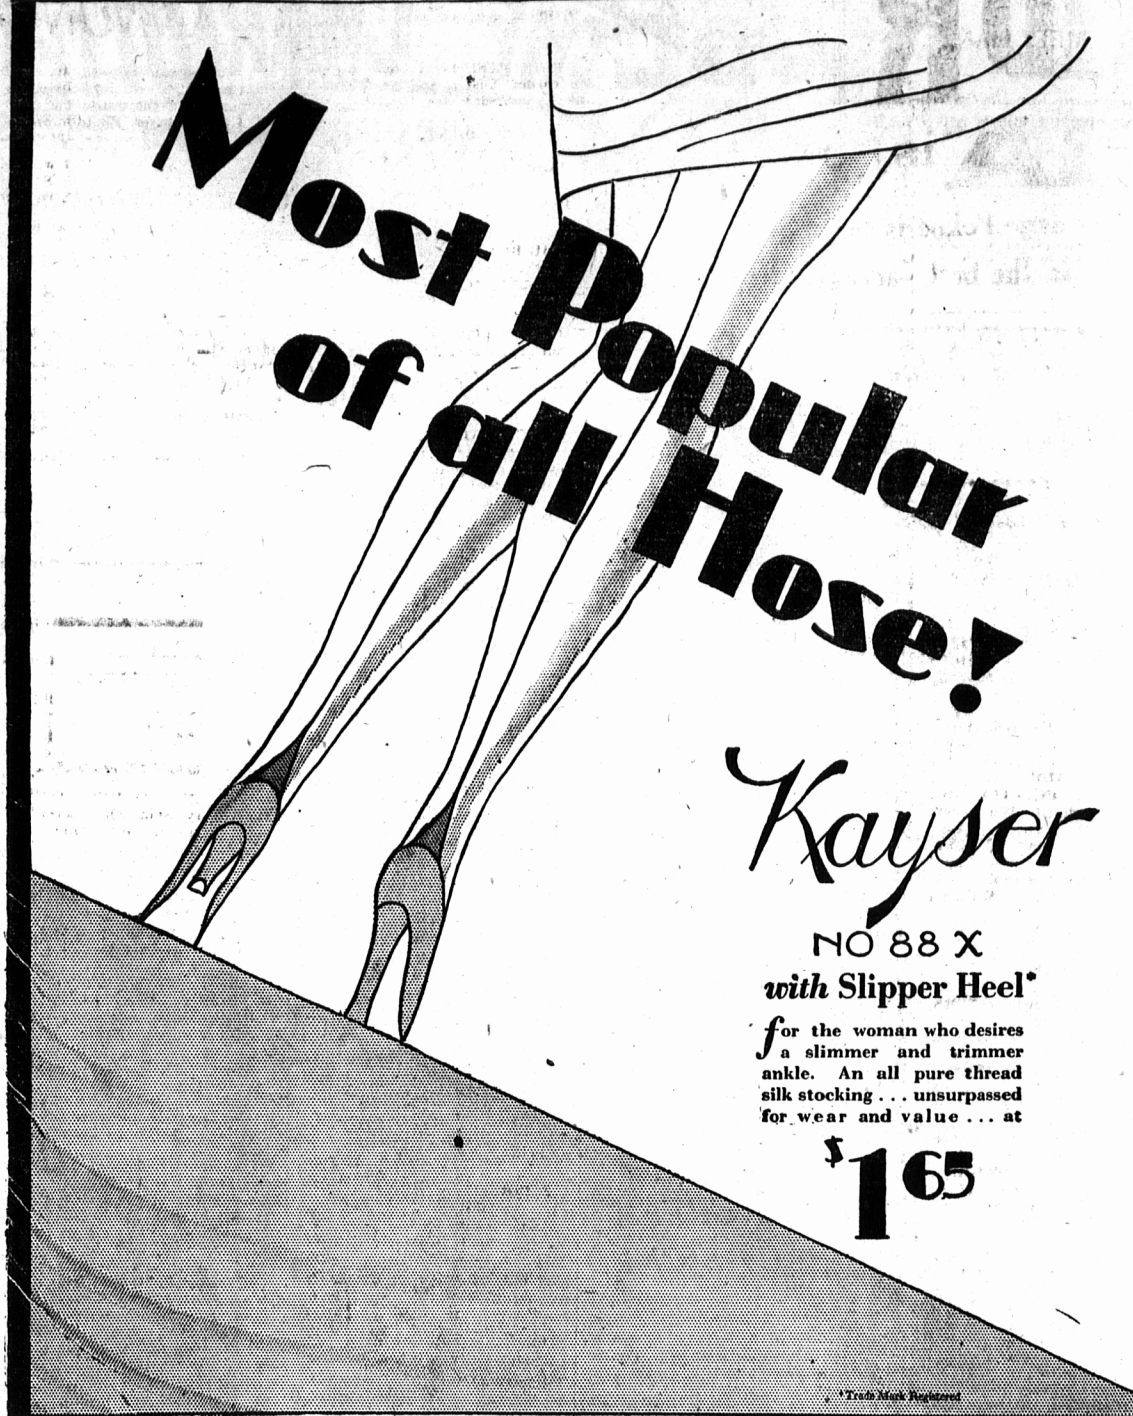

The story of Esau selling his birthright for a bowl of soup, a subject of the choice of evil courses, and made an earnest appeal to young men and women to treasure their birthright of leadership, of purity and of their souls' welfare.

In the morning, the choir sang the anthem "Holy Art Thou" set to Handel's Largo, and in the evening Macy's "The Friend Who Waiteth Night." At the evening service two fine solos were rendered by Mrs. Hillist of Halifax, former of Summerside, namely "Open the Gates of the Temple" and "Crossing the Bar." As organ offertories, Mendelssohn's "Notturmo" and Roff's "Cavatina" were played by Prof. W. E. Fletcher, the greatly esteemed organist of the Church. It is a matter of very great satisfaction not only to the choir but to the entire congregation and indeed to the citizens generally that Prof. and Mrs. Fletcher have reconsidered their decision to go away and will continue to exercise their splendid talent in the service of Trinity United Church and the music-loving public of Charlottetown. Several members of the choir have lately left, or are about to leave to pursue their studies or carry on their vocations in other places namely Misses Pearl Johnson and Mary Rogers and Messrs. James Farquharson and Fred Whitehead. The heartiest good wishes of Trinity United Church go with these young ladies and gentlemen to their vocations of effort.

The Trail Rangers will meet this evening at 6 o'clock the Willing Circle of King's Daughters also this evening at 7:30 and the Tuxis Squares on Thursday at 7:30 to re-organize for the coming season's activities.

Gunmen Escape With $2,500 Cash

(Canadian Press) KING CITY, Ont., Sept. 21.—Two gunmen held up the branch of the Bank of Montreal here this afternoon and escaped with $2,500 in cash. No trace of the bandits has been located but County, Provincial and City Police are scouring York County and the City of Toronto in search of them with a mere description furnished by M. S. Benson, Manager of the bank, as the sole clue.

TRYON TID BITS

"Thirty days hath September." Everyone remembers these words. Not immortal words of Shakespeare, Byron, Scott or Tennyson, but simply part of the table of time as learned in the little old school where we learned "reading, writing and arithmetic," and received many a trimming. Those were the happy days, but with them past and gone forever, we must face the task of earning a livelihood. So to parents and children alike this warning may not be out of place. Learn every lesson so well that memory will hold fast as in "Thirty days hath Sept."

Half the month is past and gone, there is yet quite a lot of gain in the fields and judging by rain the dry season has ended and potatoes must be harvested, "tween showers. But perhaps, I am only croaking. Let us hope so anyhow.

Rev. J. S. and Mrs. McKay, of Nova Scotia, passed through Tryon, on Monday, enroute to Port Hill, where they will visit their niece Mrs. J. Maynard. On Sunday evening Mr. McKay, preached in Hampton United Church, and the people flocked from far and near, anxious to once again hear the Rev. J. S. who at one time was the popular pastor of Hampton-Tryon-Bonshaw, Presbyterian congregation.

Their Tryon friends were indeed glad to see them but regret that their stay was not longer.

Not to be outclassed by Borden, where they boast of a diver a well known resident of this vicinity, has tried the trade. It is said that even the high class performers of the fall fairs fail to outclass this local amateur.

Along the banks of every brook and stream in Tryon, prowling hunters looking for ducks, and lucky indeed is the wild duck who escapes the eagle eyed hunters of this vicinity.

A Pontiac Coach, owned and driven by one of our Tryon boys, recently met with a slight mishap. When almost to the bottom of Boulter's hill on the Bedeque road, a heater owned by Mr. Geo. McKay, and which had broken loose from her pasture came charging down from the high bank directly in front of the car. Timely application of brakes saved an upset, but owing to the greasy surface of the road the locked wheels slid, and results were a broken leg for the heater and a damaged radiator for the motorist. It is a cinch that cows at large do not obey the rules of the road other wise this one would still be roaming alive.

Latest reports available, regarding the condition of Mrs. Wendell Lea, Tryon, who is seriously ill in The P. E. I. Hospital, announce improvements. This will be good news indeed to both relatives and friends.

Messrs Geo. Murhead, and Alfred Kelouagh were recent visitors to Borden.

Mr. J. Erle Thomson, was a visitor to Charlottetown, on Sunday.
