FEATURE STARTS AT 3:15 - 6:50 - 9:10

Georgetown and Vicinity

Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Victor Newport, accompanied by their two children were visitors to Georgetown recently.

Miss Marjorie White, Charlottetown, paid a short visit to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George White of this town.

Bill Llewellyn has purchased the building, on Water Street, formerly owned by Mr. F. J. Henry and will convert it into a modern garage. Some time ago Mr. Llewellyn purchased from the town of Georgetown the adjacent building and is remodelling it into a dwelling house.

Mr. William Martell, local lobster packer, is busily engaged fitting up the building he recently hauled from Burnt Point, and will turn it into a cook house and dining hall for his large factory staff.

Kenneth Fraser, recently returned from overseas service, will return to Headquarters, M. D. S., Halifax on the 26th of the month for his discharge. Following that, he plans a visit to Ottawa and on return home will again enter the employ of the Canadian National Railways. Previous to enlistment he was assistant station agent in Summerside—Geo.

"And we have two lovely swans now. A charming pair. So affected, so decorative. A black and a white. The white one looks like a Bridgette Ferry, and the black one like Parvaneh mourning." His shoulders were shaking.

"Where else is there, Jim?"

"She's tricked Father into this marriage."

"And the man who shot himself?"

"I knew him. So did Dick. He was a splendid guy. She must have hurt him foully. He's dead now. And he had the whole wide world to live for. Don't forget, he pounded the sand, 'don't forget, the same woman now in Mother's home!'"

"She was my mother's friend," Doris said. "What are you going to do now?" she whispered.

"You're going to marry me."

"The fog hid them shadowy to each other. She held herself away. 'I should like you to marry me, sweet.'"

"Oh Jim. I never wanted it to be this way."

"We've always known each other."

"Yes," she said. "That's why you mustn't ask me like this. You mustn't."

"Why not?"

"Because it's not you speaking, Jim. It's not really you. I won't have you offer yourself, because of her!"

"He shook his head violently. 'No because of her body, because of her!'"

"Yes. It's not love for me, but your hatred of Kitty Draper. You want to marry me for a convenience and have a safe respectable excuse for running away from unhappiness. An excuse that your father will accept, and that will make him happy. But you're not if you think I'd take you, darling, on terms like that! When I marry you I want you for my love. Not a miserable stony-eyed hurt child with a white feather in his hand!"

She got up very fast and started off down the beach. Jim raced after her. He gripped her arm. She did not struggle, only let the force of him break against her. "Listen to me, Doris. I've always loved you and because of our lifelong faith, our devoted love, I thought I had you always."

"Then marry me. I've got"

ACTION DRAMA BRINGS ARMIDA

Armida, one of Hollywood's favorite singing-dancing performers has come to the city for a special USO tour and appears opposite Kirby Grant in Universal's "Bad Men of the Border" now at the Capitol Theatre.

The popular screen entertainer is seen as a secret investigator for the military government in the new action thriller and presents the comic, "Carmenita." One of the film's musical highlights.

Fuzzy Knight, Barbara Sears, Francis McDonald and Edmund Wayne are others in the cast. Wallace W. Fox produced and directed.

THEY WERE EXPENDABLE FROM BEST SELLER NOVEL

In line with the policy that great books make great films, M-G-M adds "They Were Expendable" to its impressive list of picture adaptations of best-sellers.

"They Were Expendable" co-starring Robert Montgomery and John Wayne and opening today on the Prince Edward screen, was adapted from William B. Eby's best-selling narrative of the part played by Torpedo Boat Squadron No. 3 in the Philippines campaign.

The plot follows the heroic action of this gallant group throughout the many phases of the battle. These are the men who enabled high-ranking officers to escape on a perilous trip out of Batjan under the noses of Japanese destroyers; the courageous few who had to be "expendable" in order to slow the Japanese offensive.

Only a few of the squadron survived but this powerful story of their courage and devotion to duty will live as a saga of great bravery.

Together with Montgomery and Wayne, the cast of "They Were Expendable" features Dolores Costello in the film's only featured feminine role. Jack Holt and Ward Bond. It was directed by Capt. John Ford.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

James sent me no Valentine to mark this year's passing. The chaff that continued today, to bare fields and meadows down to an icy treacherous covering was among his concerns. This won't be too good for the hayfields, Ellen and the roads were never so icy. But James asked me: "Why don't you have a bit of a rest, this afternoon?" which was never before done, for then I would have missed James's visit when he came with his father on an important mission—and on the way to the mill. James placed his hand approvingly on the small

The Second Mrs. Draper

By Noel Pierce CHAPTER X The orchestra was playing the blithing melodious strains of an old favorite. "Did I remember, Dorian, you... I adore you." Dorian's eyes were full on his bent face. "Home, James — at last." Her eyes were calm and lucid, like a summer pool in a green wood. "Well, Jim?" "Not too well, sweet." There was so much to say that he simply didn't know how to begin. "You've such a sparkling face, Jim."

My back muscles are in good shape again."

IN MEMORIAM

1946 — MRS. P. J. DUFFY — 1946 MOTHER Always our comrade, Always our friend, Always with patience, Her help would be kind, Always at hand, When life's problems we met, Throughout all the world Our best friend yet, Always consistent, Understanding our needs, Shared all our sorrows, As true as gold, Lovingly remembered by Sons and Daughters.

led's head when he, having fancied a bicycle chain—all that remains of a favorite mode of travel of Jock's a few years since—that would suit in his scheme of gear-ing threshing machines and engines and a small saw, for as Carolyn explained last night "he is ruining my bread-knife with his sawing." He drew a small purse from a pocket and unbitten, paid for his purchases.

What matter if two red cents was the price of one article and one lone copper was the purchase price of the other? A bargain had been made and best of all in James' eyes an indebtedness written off. We found a pleasure later in placing two extra plates on the supper table, when two visitors came to join us. One a well known stockman and farmer from the next-to-an-adjointing district; the other a popular live-stock dealer from a neighboring Province, who in the interests of his extensive business has become a frequent visitor to our shores. James was, as usual, the perfect host and if a fleeting picture of an ancient patriarch at the door of his tent or within, reclining on a soft couch came to me when James in his arm chair wished "some matches, Ellen" or "some apples, Ellen" I too enjoyed the pleasant and informative farm-chat that followed.

Judy's letter came from that same Province in this morning's mail, and James himself put on his glasses to read it. She continues to make good progress in school if she does "cry a little over the history and algebra" which in this first year she finds perplexing. History must be bewildering, the old of it and so much that is new—and world wide of every nation. But Judy was not one to waste many tears she would soon "find a way or make it" which spirit will ultimately carry her to a worthwhile goal. She has been skating and asks for many acquaintances and "write oftener, Mrs. Ellen." And now James, our company gone eats a late apple by way of a lunch that just might become

"Lead at night." "Old weather this" I say "for St. Valentine's Day not knowing what sentiment the remark might lead up to in this quiet hour before retiring. But he never hears me. "Ellen" he says with a contented sigh, "we sold a heater tonight—that one by its not sentiment but remarks like this, that after all, as he often tells me, "go to keep a bite in our mouths"—I must hear more about the transaction. Until tomorrow — Diary — Good night."
