BAB HAS AN ERA OF COMPLETE HAPPINESS

CHAPTER XLII.

Neil and I had often talked of the child which so soon was to come to us. I always returned to the subject with eagerness. At times I thought I detected something in Neil, a hint of something connected with his love for me, that seemed morbid. I was unable to put the idea from me, and determined to destroy it if possible. When I spoke of my fears, he said:
"I'm not really morbid, Bab. Yet it seems to me that a child will take you from me—divide your love."

"Silly boy," I laughed at him. But, as always when Neil spoke of wanting all my love, it in a way comforted me. Surely no man would speak like that unless he loves the woman to whom he spoke? In my joy at my coming motherhood, I almost forgot that I ever had felt that anything could take Neil from me; or that I ever had doubted him in any way. Now he was so tender, so thoughtful. Not since the night when he came home so happily and told me that "a very good friend" had made it impossible for Scott to harm his business, had he been once impatient or forgetful of me. I had a sensation of being wrapped about with love; a feeling that nothing would ever again make me unhappy. There was one thing about Neil's and I supposed other men's, business methods that I could not bring myself to feel was necessary for success—although when I spoke of this, Neil patiently explained—or tried to explain to me: It was the idea that late supper parties, at which much wine was drunk, motor rides to out-lying Inns where carabaret dancing and hilarious gaiety was kept up until the wee small hours, and such pleasures, helped business. In his confident manner Neil had expounded the methods by which he proposed to extend his business. With each detail that he described, I grew more certain that such means were unnecessary. When I said so, Neil only laughed at me, and said it wasn't to be expected I should know about such things.

Now this was his way in everything. He only talked to me of success; never did he at this time, mention that he was ever anxious or worried. He spent money lavishly; as always—more than lavishly for my comfort.
"I am falling in love with you all over again, Neil," I said to him, "yet how can I when I never have fallen out?"
"Just beginning to appreciate your luck?" he questioned, with a laugh. "It is too bad you had to wait five years to find out what a prize you had found in your matrimonial package."
"But honestly, dear, I am so frightened sometimes, I love you so much."
"I'll soon only get half, so don't worry."
In all the years that came after, I have looked back upon this time as one of the happiest in my life. Coming after a period of worry and questioning anxiety, it was all the more welcome; it stood out the more clearly.

Another thing, too, that had added to my happiness and content was the fact that Neil had not been drinking much lately—just a cocktail or a glass of wine occasionally. I was very watchful. He seemed to sense that he would worry me if he drank more, and so refrained.
Then came the day when my thoughts went flying across great spaces of time and emotion. I lost count of time, of everything but the one fact that I must make this journey into the land of motherhood alone. When I came back from that far land, my baby boy lay on my arm, and Neil was bending over me with a face transfigured.
What did anything matter now
