If a leak in the radiator defies all ordinary means of detection, remove the radiator, cover the filler cap and the inlet, and place a plug in the overflow pipe. Now plug the outlet, leaving enough space so that the hose of an air pump may be inserted. The entire radiator is immersed in water and air is pumped into it. The leak will be seen by the steady stream of bubbles which will arise to the surface of the water.

The Legend of The Willow Pattern

In China, the most ancient kingdom existing on the earth and where life has unfolded many a strange drama, the legend of the Willow-ware had its birth in the long, long ago. A little uncertainty exists as to where it was first manufactured, some of the early writers claiming its original exportation from Nan-kin, but, apparently more authentic information declares the former to be a fallacy and Ching-te-chen River (a branch of the Yangtze-Kiang) was responsible for its first production. And that, away back of the days when Hong Wou was crowned emperor of China and instituted the Ming dynasty. But, however the antecedence may be, the Ching-te-chen poteries have contributed their full quota in preserving the mediæval character of the Chinese Emperor. Capt. F. Brinkley, in the Ambassadors edition of the Oriental Series tells us that the potters of that city (formerly Chang-nan-chin) had become so expert at the close of the sixth century as to be distinguished by an order from the palace. Also, that the manufacture of pottery began in China more than 200 years, B. C.

In 1280, A. D., when the Sung emperors were driven south by the Mongols, the northern poteries were abandoned and the art concentrated at Ching-te-chen now the greatest ceramic metropolis in the whole world. MORE THAN 3000 KILNS. Nearly all the fine Chinese porcelain exported to Europe and America comes from there. It has more than 3000 kilns flinging their fleecy flames into the air. Travellers tell us that Ching-te-chen at night looks like a city on fire. For nearly eight centuries it has been the seat of the imperial factories. Unwalled it is, with more than a million inhabitants. No foreigner is allowed to remain overnight unless he lodges with a friend. The city is orderly, governed by a mandarin, and well policed, an officer to every ten houses.

Yet, if legends are true, their defense of centuries ago was very inadequate to check the onward rush of Cupid, for a little Ching-te-chen princess in love and without even the remotest idea that she was making history, became the raison d'être of the Real Old Willow. Perhaps when the June bride of 1929 has returned from her magic honeymoon, a bit of the blue and white Willow-ware, whether ancestral or modern, may find its way among her rare and valued collection to the fastidiously arranged cabinet. Specimens, even those of the Orient, vary a good deal, supposed to have been brought about by the different artists painting the design by hand. The Oriental design was introduced in England about 1780 by Turner of the Caughley factory, the engraving done by Thomas Minton, an apprentice. Yet probably the finest specimen to be found either English or Oriental is Booth's Sillican, manufactured in Tunstall, Staffordshire. Showing all the components of the love story, the design, in bold and marine blue, stands out deftly on a rich creamy background.

OF A PRINCESS
 We are told that the Princess, Kong Shee, lived with her father, a wealthy mandarin, on the banks of a beautiful lagoon. That the house was very picturesque, and old enough to have settled into the landscape. And that the mandarin and his daughter were very, very happy until a romance sprang up between the princess and her father's private secretary. His name was Chang. Secretly they became engaged, but as Chang was of humble lineage, the mandarin, on first intimation of the affair, made haste to subvert the scheme in its entirety. Forbidding Chang to enter the house, he promised Konk Shee's hand to a wealthy duke, when the willow-blossoms would begin to wither. To this the little princess stamped her foot in stark refusal. "I must marry Chang," she flung back, tilting her head with an un-surrendering sigh, though to the realm of disobedience she had never before aspired. "Y-shang-yo-fa!" (there is reward as well as punishment) replied the mandarin, his gold snuff box dangling from his silk girdle. Then he folded his silk clad arms and ordered the servants to lock her in a lonely wing over the house, one that jutted out over the water.

The obeyed, though reluctantly, and looked meaningly at one another. He dismissed her of all attendance from her maid, save that of "rice time." Kong Shee's heart was very sore, yet she did not weep. One morning she watched the willow tree outside her window and she fancied that it breathed of hope. She fanned the spark into a flame, thinking long and deeply of her promise to Chang. When almost a month had passed, the willow tree whispered that danger lay close—the blossoms had already shown signs of decay. Now, it was a golden Ching-ming (festive season) morning. The butterflies flew in clouds about her window. Through the bamboo bars she stretched out her hand to welcome them and fancied that the swish of their wings uttered "courage, courage." Evening was closing in. On the calm, silvery waters she saw a coconut shell drifting toward her. She watched it come closer and closer. Then, quick as a flash, her nimble little fingers entwined the bamboo rods of the lake. The gods had whispered—the duke was on his way and the coconut shell was soon on its return trip. The willow tree spread its branches as though whispering "Speed! Speed! The flower petals fluttered and Chang was waiting on the other side which barricaded the window. But alas! she was beaten; Struggling her strength increased, until she had wrested the shell from the placid water. Extracting the crumpled paper from the inside she read: "I dare not post this letter lest it fall into the hands of the mandarin. Will you come with me?" "Gladly will I go if you will come and fetch me," replied Kong Shee. Lovebirds twittered. Chank had some—oh joy! at last! Soon their flying feet were midway on the bridge, the irate mandarin gaining in fiery pursuit. They could hear the rustle of his silken garments. Then around the bend of a clump of trees they vanished. In a little house with fir trees growing around it they took refuge. It was the dwelling of Kong Shee's maid, and we are inclined to believe that the little princess was soon hugging in loving arms. From them they hired a coolie to row them to an island, where they

"Capt. Swagger At Prince Edward"

Rod La Rocque and Sue Carroll Score Big Hit In Sensational Photo Play.

"Captain Swagger" is in every way a good show with its exciting plot, interesting characters and sumptuous backgrounds. Rod La Rocque as the Escadrille, Ulrich Haupt as the German aviator, and Sue Carroll as the wife of New York night life, entertain in every sequence in which they appear, and the star, Mr. La Rocque, particularly shines in the character of a lovable, if braggart "High Society" wastrel, an ex-ace who finally wins out in the cabaret haunts where he has been the prodigal of the decade during the post-war years. The opening War sequence is extremely effective, Rod's success as a cabaret performer later in the act, not less so, and the restaurant set-up and subsequent pursuit are thrilling. Richard Tucker presents a picture of a middle-aged clubman and Victor Potel of a French valet. A burning plane—a gallant exchange of guns—these the links in the amazing chain. Fate forged in one of the most dramatic screen productions of the year, you can't afford to miss it. The second to last exciting chapter of "The Fire Detective" that lovable, mischievous little "Big Boy" in "Hot Luck," round an exceptionally fine week end program.

- CHURCH ARMY CRUSADERS—The Church Army Crusaders from England, with Captain Marshall in charge, are now conducting an inspiring Crusade in the Parish of Port Hill. On Monday, July 1st, they leave for the Parish of St. Peter's, Alberton, where the order of services will be as follows: Monday and Tuesday, O'Leary at 8 p. m.; Wednesday and Thursday, Alma at 8 p. m.; Friday, Kildare at 3 and 8 p. m.; Sunday and Monday, Alberton at 2.30 and 8 p. m. respectively.
- CORNWALL-YORK POINT INSTITUTE—The June meeting of the Cornwall-York Point Institute met at the home of Mr. Duncan Robinson, York Point. It opened by singing of ode followed by the roll call which was answered by seventeen members. $10 was voted for prize money for Cornwall and York Point Schools. Collectors were appointed to canvass the different districts for help for the Red Cross work. The singing of the National Anthem lived happily until the jealous duke hearing of their whereabouts, visited the island and killed Chang. Preferring to perish with her husband rather than live without him, Kong Shee set fire to the house. The story goes, that the gods, in sympathy, transformed the lovers into two immortal doves, emblems of constancy.
