Presentation to Major Taylor by Boyne L.O.L.

MAJOR GEORGE TAYLOR

An event of much interest took place in Boyne Orange Lodge room, Thursday night, April 10th when Major the Rev. Geo. C. Taylor was the guest of honor.

An address of welcome from Boyne L. O. A. No. 614 was read by the W. M. Bro. L. B. Miller, accompanied by the presentation of a beautiful pearl handled gold mounted walking stick suitably engraved, presented by Bro. Past Grand Master J. H. Bell on behalf of the Lodge.

After the presentation Major Taywith the 9th Battalion having enlisted in the west and was transferred to the second. He had the misfortune to fall into the hands of the Huns and was a prisoner of war for the long period of three years and eight months.

Sapper Bernard McKenna, of Tracadie Cross is a brother of Gr. Ferdinand and McKenna, of the eighth Siege Battery who won the Military Medal. Both brothers have come out of the war with honors. Sapper McKenna having won the Military Service Medal. He was in No. 2 section of the skilled Railway Employees Battalion and put in two years and one month in France.

Pte. N. McKenzie, Mount Vernon was with the 13th Battalion having transferred to the 105th. He was two years in France and was wounded at Hill 70.

Pte. A. McGillivray of Cherry Valley transferred from the 105th to the 7th Canadian Engineers. He was wounded at Arras and Cambrai.

Spr. A.B. Martin, Hope River went over with the 5th Railway troops and spent fifteen months in France, as also did Spr. A. Pineau of North Rustico who also returned last night.

Quite a number of the others who returned last night left here with the 105th.

Mr. Appleton, Y.M.C.A. Military representative accompanied the boys from Emerald.

Much to his regret owing to not feeling well Mr. P.S. Brown who usually meets the returning men at Sackville on behalf of the Y. C. has been unable this week to do so.

Proceedings in the Provincial Legislature

We had heard a great deal about the extravagance of the government, but he had failed to see it. In reality the revenue of the province today, considering the purchasing power of the dollar, was better than it was ten years ago, and he thought the government did exceedingly well in making ends meet at all, whereas they had shown substantial surpluses.

As to the matter of fishing he would like to see greater development. He would like to see more schooner fishing. It was perhaps not generally known, but he knew from personal observation that trawlers frequently came within the three-mile limit at night and worked havoc among our fisheries. The lobster industry was being ruined by overfishing and unless something was done shortly the lobster industry would very soon become a thing of the past.

He concluded with a warm tribute to his friend, the late Mr. Hubert Howatt, one of the finest characters he knew and one whom he had learned to admire during his brief acquaintance with him.

W. H. DENNIS, O'Leary, followed. The last speaker, he said, had intimated that the Opposition was extremely anxious to get into power. He, Mr. Dennis, would say, if they were, that it was solely in order to give the province better government.

Agriculture and fisheries were the most important industries in this province. It should be the duty of the Department of Agriculture to do all in its power to help the farmers, to contribute to the welfare and happiness of the homes. He contended that during the Liberal regime much more had been done for exhibitions and seed fairs than under the present government. Under the present government exhibitions had ceased to exist. The seed fairs had become "as farcical as the Turkish harem without women." He had attended the last seed fair in Summerside. There were a few bags of seeds and the management were trying to get enough men together to hold an auction. The Department of Agriculture had spent $16,600 last year and the only result was the abolition of exhibitions and seed fairs. Much had been said of co-operation, egg circles and wool grading, but for the benefit accruing from these the government was not entitled to any credit. The Department of Agriculture should receive fairly reports of the markets. He charged that the millers of the province had ordered the government to "keep its hands off" the importation of bran and middlings, as it was interfering with their business.

"If I were Premier," said Mr. Dennis, "I would, with the consent of my associates, appoint a Commissioner of Fisheries." He believed the fishermen would approve of this.

He granted that school fairs were a benefit, but the idea was not original with the government. The government had not granted any prizes and in no other way helped the school fairs. He concluded with a tribute to the soldiers and expressed his readiness to join in anything intended for the benefit of the soldiers.

MR. J. D. STEWART was the next speaker. He was amused at the condescending way in which the leader of the Opposition had dealt with the speeches of the mover and seconder of the address. He, Mr. Bell, might well take these speeches as a pattern in conciseness and in adherence to the subject.

The war, he continued, was an interminable subject. Great Britain had built up the most tremendous fighting machine the world had ever known, and in that machine Canadians, including our own Prince Edward Islanders, had played a most glorious part. This had not been done without sacrifice and he extended his sympathy to those, some of them members of this House, upon whom the burden of the war had fallen. In this connection also he paid a warm tribute to the late Mr. Hubert Howatt, who was one of the first to welcome him in this House when he came as a stranger, and whose friendship he valued most highly.

The greatest incentive to nation-building, continued Mr. Stewart, was patriotism. They all remembered when, as boys, with what avidity they read of the heroism, the valour and the skill of their ancestors. Before the war, we in Canada were English, Irish, Scotch, French, and we gloried in the traditions of our respective nationalities. History is sometimes made rapidly and much history had been written in the past five years. Henceforth we shall glory in and study the example set by our own Canadian heroes; Canada shall be one of the greatest nations of coming ages.

In listening to the speeches of honorable members on the other side of the House, he was struck with the quality of the criticism they indulged in. There were, he said, two kinds of criticism, one broad, helpful, up-building, the other narrow, self-seeking, destructive. It would not be too much trouble to classify the criticism from the opposition side of the House, as in the latter category.

The junior member for Cardigan had taken occasion to refer to the faithful allegiance of the member for Tignish to his party. Faithful allegiance to a cause is commendable but it was observed that the Hon. Junior Member for Cardigan had not himself received any such commendation from those who followed him. He, Mr. Stewart, might illustrate his point by following the political career of a gentleman whom he knew. This gentleman belonged to a political party in whose welfare he took a keen interest, but for some reason, it may have been jealousy, it may have been disappointment over his failure to secure an office, or it may have been that the fields on the other side of the fence looked more promising, the other party being in power—anyway, he found himself suddenly in the green fields with the other party. Shortly afterwards the latter party went into opposition. This gentleman did not change. He was elected to a seat in the Legislature and became one of the most ardent of his party's supporters and his attacks were directed with special sharpness against the leader of his former party, for what reason he, Mr. Stewart, did not know. Some changes took place and during the next session his demeanor was most laudable and bland, and, when in the House, which was not very often, he took little part in the debates. That was a brief biography of that gentleman, but so far as he, Mr. Stewart, knew, the real cause of his changed allegiance and of his subsequent erratic career had never been fully explained. Some said he was looking for office, others that he wanted to get back, — anyway, that was the story. He, Mr. Stewart, was not applying it.

Some Opposition members had tried to argue that the platform of the present government had not been lived up to. They insinuated that the country was no better off financially than it was under the former government. If they read the political history of the province, if they read the report of the sworn outside auditors, they would find that the debt of the province was reduced by $6,000 during the time the present party were in power. Of what value, asked Mr. Stewart, is such criticism? It only shows that those who indulge in it are unworthy of credence.

At the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's speech, the address in reply to the speech from the throne was put to the vote, and carried. The House adjourned till 9 a.m. Saturday.

House met at 11.30.

A bill entitled an Act respecting the registration of births, deaths and marriages was read a first time and set down for second reading.

The Premier read a communication stating that the Lieutenant Governor was indisposed and would be unable to be present to receive the draft address in reply to the speech from the Throne but would be willing to receive a deputation of members at Government House at noon.

Mr. James Paton and Mr. David McDonald were named by the speaker as the deputation for this purpose. The House adjourned to 12 o'clock.

Upon the return of the deputation at 12.20 House met and after hearing their report adjourned to Monday at 3 p. m.
