Eighty Per Cent of B.C.'s 1945 Salmon Cannery Production to go Overseas

Here's a hefty gill-netted salmon about to be weighed. To the crew of this B.C. salmon fisherman who may net $5,000 during a good year, he represents big business.

Thousands of cans of salmon being packed by these Indian girls at the British Columbia Packer's Namu plant will soon be furnishing main courses for hungry Europeans. Of British Columbia's 1945 cannery output, 80% will go overseas.

This huge hauler, manned by hand with the aid of a block and tackle, transfers as many as 100 salmon at a time from seine net to ship's hold. Seine nets are commonly 100,000 to 200,000 feet in one catch they will net up to 5,000 salmon.

A salmon seiner unloads the day's catch into this fish conveyor which carries it into the plant to be canned in just 24 hours flat from the time it leaves the water.
