PUBLIC FORUM

ANGLICAN DOCTRINE
Sir—I greatly appreciate the letter of the Rev. R. H. A. Haslam which appeared in your issue of the 14th.

To some of my hearers my remarks on the Report of Doctrine issued by certain Anglican Churches may have conveyed the impression that the Anglican people are a whole that departed from its Articles, but such is not the case. I am convinced that the rank and file of the Anglican people are loyal to their Doctrinal Standards. I am, Sir, etc.

His wife, clinging to his shoulder to prevent their separation in the crush, smiled happily. "I know you could do it," she said.

"That was certainly wild and desolate—yes," he said, with a grimace. "But we never had any real discomfort. And although we flew at extreme heights, up over 14,000 feet, it was never cold at any time inside the ship."

"What are you going to do now?" he was asked. "Get a shave," Hughes, smiling and evidently very happy, replied to the policemen he led the plane.

"Not very," he answered. "Because of the number of questions asked Hughes and the inevitable short press conference after he left the plane."
