Barbara Ann Welcomed To N. Y.

BY FRED KERNER

NEW YORK, Dec. 7 — (CP) — Barbara Ann Scott was officially welcomed to New York City late today at a brief ceremony in City Hall. Mayor William O'Dwyer, unable to meet her train this morning, gave the Ottawa skater the freedom of the city.

The pretty, 20-year-old world champion figure skater spent a hectic day visiting theatre officials. Everywhere she went, celebrity-acquainted New Yorkers stopped to stare. Many of them whispered: "That's Barbara Ann Scott," and others quickly brought out paper and pencil and asked for her autograph.

Berliners Showed Confidence In Western Allies

BY J. M. ROBERTS, JR.

(Associated Press News Analyst) The Western Allies, by their sponsorship of the Berlin election and its results, are more definitely committed than ever to fight to the last ditch against Russian designs on the city.

The 82.2 per cent vote against Communism, being hailed throughout the western world as a great victory, which it is. But it seems to me that the other angle is of more lasting importance.

The fact that 82.2 per cent voted as all in the face of Russian threats and Russian propaganda that the Allies would eventually pull out of Berlin, is the big thing. It represents faith in the Allied commitment to stay in Berlin; faith that people who stand for Democracy will not be abandoned to Communist reprisals; faith that those who struggle for human rights will win eventually, and faith in the material strength demonstrated to the Berliners through the air lift.

Churchill Turned To Painting As Outlet For Worry

By GLENN WILLIAMS

LONDON, Dec. 7 — (AP) — Winston Churchill took up painting as an outlet for worry, he says in a new book to be published tomorrow.

London critics hailed the thin volume of two essays as an example of Churchill's writing at its best and said it contained much worthy advice on the use of leisure time. The book is "Painting As A Pastime," (published by Otham Press, Limited, and Ernest Benn, Limited).

Churchill did not begin painting until he was 40, but he became expert enough to have some of his paintings hung in the Royal Academy's annual exhibition of outstanding new work. During the First World War, when he was relieved in 1915 of day-to-day executive duties as head of the Admiralty but continued as a member of the war cabinet, he says he had "long hours of utterly unwanted leisure in which to contemplate the fateful unfolding of the war."

Chateau Sinister

By Leslie Beresford

It appeared for instance, that he scarcely ever left the Chateau and never without Burnaby, and then by closed car, being driven swiftly into Biarritz and back mostly to see his solicitor, Lemaire.

It was after such a visit, during a late afternoon that the discovery on the Pont de la Vierge had been made. Yet when O'Hara was able to glance through the newspaper-cuttings of the investigation, which Henri produced for him, he was surprised to find nobody had mentioned why such an obvious redoubt should suddenly have taken it into his head to be strolling—apparently alone — along the rocky coast during a violent storm.

Making up his mind to become acquainted with this solicitor, Lemaire, O'Hara drove himself into Biarritz during the third afternoon, giving Rittenburg a hint as to what he was doing. But when he called at the office just behind the Casino gardens, a clerk informed him that the solicitor had gone that morning to Paris, and might not be back for a week.

Disappointed and not seeing what good he could do in Biarritz, he was about to return to the Chateau when a hand was laid on his arm. It was Carnot, of the Surete, with an expression of surprised amusement in his shrewd eyes.

"An excellent meeting, m'sieur!" he greeted. "And what brings you in here? No, I hope, to say any harm has come to mademoiselle?" "On the contrary, she is with so many people that the chance of any harm coming to her is small."

"Your men?" O'Hara stared at him. "I haven't seen any about." "You won't, unless they've been instructed to introduce themselves to you. All the same, no harm in having a colony of film-artists around as well, I assure you."

"Actually—mine. It's company for Miss Payne, anyhow. It frees me a bit. You see—I'm interested."

"In mademoiselle? But, of course! Could you be anything else?" The twinkle in Carnot's eyes made O'Hara flush hotly despite himself.

"My interest in her is purely through the fact that she has the Chateau, and I was born there—" "Surely!" the other nodded, laughing. "We will put it that way if you wish, m'sieur. And because of the Chateau you want to get to the root of this curious business?"

"That's why I'm here. I'd meant to call and ask a few questions of her solicitor Lemaire—" "And he's in Paris—" "Is there anything you do not know, Carnot?" O'Hara stopped him in surprise.

to have met you like this. Without the presence of mademoiselle, we may talk more freely. If you can spare me some little while—" "By all means. I should like to satisfy a shocking thirst at the same time. Carnot, if you're as hot and parched as I am!" "In future, m'sieur, I think it would be as well if we did not meet with so much publicity as just now." Carnot said softly. "As it happened, it was unpreventable, and so far as I can be aware—may not have been seen by any-
