Would Like To See Marsh Plan Here

OTTAWA, May 25 — (CP) — Sir William Beveridge, author of the famous report on social security for the United Kingdom, today expressed hope that Canada would adopt a social security program along the lines proposed in a Canadian social security report prepared by Dr. Leonard C. Marsh of Ottawa, "or something even better."

Sir William spent a busy day, addressing two meetings in rapid succession. This morning he appeared before a joint meeting of three parliamentary committees — the commons social security and reconstruction committees and the senate social security committee. Later he addressed a joint meeting of delegates to the convention of the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities and Ottawa Canadian club.

In addressing the parliamentary committees he said social security is directed at overcoming want, which is but one of five "giants" that will have to be overcome in a complete reconstruction program. The others, he said, are disease, ignorance, squalor and idleness.

Of these, idleness presented the most serious problem. But twice during his lifetime, each time in a period of war, unemployment had been eliminated and it could also be eliminated in peacetime, Sir William said.

He said he expected that after the war Britain would compromise between the state enterprise of Russia and the private enterprise of the United States. He assumed Canada would also be somewhere between these two systems.

Planning to meet the post-war conditions was necessary now and would not interfere with the war effort.

He describe the report on social security by Dr. Marsh as "a remarkable document." In some particulars it differed from his report for the United Kingdom and appeared to be better adapted to meet the needs of Canada.

In addressing the meeting of Mayors and the Canadian Club, Sir William recalled that many of the most valuable suggestions he had received in drafting his report had come from municipal authorities.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King attended the meeting. The great problems of human welfare could not be solved by any one government, any one municipality "but only by a great co-operative effort of all," Mr. King said.

Dorothy Dix Says—

I never heard of a husband playing a shabbier trick on his young wife than to leave her without any support; to give everything he had to his mother, and even to take from her their little house furnishings. Certainly he must have very little affection for you if he could treat you that way, no matter how much his grasping mother urged him on to doing it.

I should say there was small chance of his ever coming back to you after the war. He will run back home to Mother. And I don't think you will lose much in losing that sort of a husband.

DEAR MISS DIX—From the time I was 17 years old until now, when I am 35, I have been in love with Jack and we have been going together. For two years I thought that the reason he didn't ask me to marry him was because my mother and an invalid sister were dependent on me, but when that obstacle was removed and he still didn't speak of marriage, I had a heart-to-heart talk with him and he told me he had no intention of marrying me or anyone else. So we called it quits.

Eventually I married a fine man. I liked him, but my heart was with Jack and Jack always kept coming back into the picture. Then my husband died and it is the same old story—always Jack whom I love and who doesn't love me.

I have made up my mind to give up my job, break up my home and leave the state to see if I can forget him, but it will mean a great sacrifice in every way. Would you advise me to do it? WORRIED.

PHILANDERER FLATTERED BY WOMAN'S SACRIFICE

ANSWER—When a woman has an obsession about a man such as you have about Jack, change of scenery won't cure it. You've got to change your mental outlook and try to see him as he is, a selfish philanderer who has never cared anything for you, but who has sacrificed you to his own ego because it flattered him to have a woman so much in love with him that she had taken leave of her common sense.

You have spent nearly twenty years in building him up as a romantic hero, a fascinator you could not resist, and no doubt you have seen yourself in the picturesque attitude of the lovelorn maiden who is faithful unto death, and you have spent barrels of unavailing tears over his coldness and indulged in orgies of self-pity.

Suppose you revamp your scenes. Look at Jack squarely and clearly and you will see a man who has never loved anybody but himself; who has never married because he wanted to spend all of his money on himself and wanted to be free of all family obligations. And if you will look hard enough at him, you will see that at the beginning of your little affair he must have been a pretty poor sport to play with the heart of a 17-year-old girl.

And if you will get a real line on yourself, you will see yourself as a silly, sentimental woman who has wasted her life loving a man who wasn't worth loving; waiting for a man to marry her who told her flat out that he never intended to marry her; a woman who has always grasped at shadows that eluded her, when real happiness was there for the taking.

You have thought yourself into love. Now think yourself out of it. Don't give up your good job. Hang on to it. Don't go away from your old friends. It isn't easy to make new ones at middle age. Make the best of the life you have instead of pining for the one you can never have. There is no folly greater than trying to fly from trouble. It follows us wherever we go. The only way to get the best of it is to stay and fight it on the spot.

DEAR MISS DIX—After being happily married for thirty years I lost my husband. I am now 60, in excellent health and well-to-do, and I have a desire for companionship and possibly marriage. Recently I met a man who I am sure could give me the happiness and companionship I long for, but he is poor and proud: And, although he is deeply attached to me, he refuses to marry me. He says it would be obnoxious for him to sleep under my roof or put his feet under my table, and he could not look my friends and relatives in the face if he did. He feels that if he married me he would be accepting my charity, although he has sufficient income for his own needs.

Can you help us solve our problem? JAN.

PRIDE SHOULD NOT DULL INDIAN SUMMER ROMANCE

ANSWER—A poor man who marries a rich woman is always put in an awkward position if he is entirely dependent upon her, but if he has enough income to provide for his own personal needs it alters the situation entirely. Then he should not let his pride stand in the way of his happiness, and he should feel that not only by his companionship and affection but by the many little services he can render her, he is more than paying for his board and keep.

Two elderly, congenial people can make the last lap of the journey of life very happy for each other if they are together, instead of its being a lonely and dreary trail to tread alone. And the man should not let his fear of what people might say keep him from enjoying an Indian summer romance.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. JOHN A. STEWART

Death, that grim visitor to every household at one time or another, entered the home of Stewarts and bore away the valiant soul of their beloved mother, Mrs. John A. Stewart.

Mrs. Stewart had been in failing health for some time, but was not confined to her bed until the week previous to her death. Not withstanding all that loving hands and care could do she passed peacefully beyond the frailities of this earthly lot to the house of many mansions, where there is no pain and no death. She was a woman greatly beloved by all who knew her, gentle in manner and friendly in spirit, always taking a deep interest in the home and church and every good and worthy cause, and the influence of her Christian life will be felt for years to come.

In homes where there was sickness, no call, regardless of the distance or weather conditions, was left unheeded and her skill and kindness in her ministration to the sick will long be remembered.

Mrs. Stewart was born in Marshfield 82 years ago, the daughter of Alexander and Barbara (Ferguson) McLauchlan.

Surviving the loss of a loving mother are the following sons and daughters: Edwin, Charlottetown; Pearl, Mrs. Wesley Matthew, York: Elizabeth, Mrs. Wm. Bears, Arlington, Mass.; Myrtle, Wallace, Harold and Margaret at home. A daughter Lyda, Mrs. Stirling Hunter, passed away in October, 1942. A son Robert was killed in the World War, June, 1915, and her husband passed away in 1936, also surviving is a sister Elizabeth, Mrs. Uzziah Boyce; Mermaid. The funeral service on April 1st was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. A. Nicholson York, assisted by Rev. Harry Baak, Marshfield.

Interment was in the Central Church Cemetery. Following were the pall bearers: Wylie Gibson, Wilfred Stewart, Charles Robertson, John Thompson, Leslie Boyce and Irving Thompson.

MR. HAROLD HALL

Many friends in Summerside and vicinity were shocked and saddened to learn of the death of Mr. Harold Hall, of Charlottetown, which occurred at the Prince Edward Island Hospital on Monday, May 10. Taken ill about six weeks ago he entered the hospital where an operation was performed and later a second operation was found to be necessary. From this Mr. Hall never completely recovered but passed away as stated. Born 54 years ago in Summerside, the son of the late Mr. Thomas Hall and his wife who was a Miss MacCrae from Bonshaw, Mr. Hall spent his youth in Summerside East. His early manhood was spent in Philadelphia where he fitted himself for his life-work, a mechanical engineer, that art having descended to him from his talented father who was one of the promoters and owners of the Hall Manufacturing Company of Summerside. On his return from United States he was employed with Bruce Stewart and Company for a year or two when he became associated with Mr. Stanley Stavert, of North Bedeque and from that association was born the firm of Hall and Stavert which operates a successful foundry and machine shop in Charlottetown. Mr. Hall had a retiring personality but in his quiet kindly way made many friends to whom he was a real friend all of whom are mourning because of his untimely death. Of late his vacations have been spent on the Hall homestead Summerside East where he renewed his old friendships. Here he spent many pleasant hours in company with his family roaming over familiar fields and enjoying a brief freedom from business cares.

The immediate family so sadly bereaved are his widow, Julia MacEachern, one son, Thomas, one daughter, Jane, one sister, Miss Ellen Hall now living at the Lennox Hotel in Charlottetown, and one brother William in California. One brother, Hugh predeceased him some time ago. His mother died when he was nine years old, but so capably and tenderly did his sister, Miss Ellen, care for him that he scarcely realized his loss.

The funeral took place on Wednesday from his late residence to Zion Presbyterian Church where the service was conducted by the Rev. Carlyle Webster. The pallbearers were George Thomson, Gordon Leich, Jack McNair, Earl MacDonald, Brooklyn Vale and George MacLean.

Interment was in the family plot in the Wilmot Valley Cemetery.

Spectacular Scenes In Historical Epic

Entirely apart from its entertainment value—and it has been called one of the most exciting as well as most authentic epics of the Southwest yet filmed—"American Empire," which will open at the Capitol Theatre to-day thru United Artists is outstanding because of its many spectacular scenes.

One of the most thrilling scenes of all occurred one night from dusk to dawn when the villains of the story, Leo Carrillo, Jack La Rue and Chris-Pin Martin planned to wipe out entirely a small Western town in order to rid the community in one fell swoop of the ranchers who refused to have their cattle constantly stolen.

With four hundred of the modern West's roughest, toughest fellows they staged their war in the deep gully of a gravel pit.

Up above on the rim of the canyon behind a barbed-wire barricade, were the "goodies" in the story—Richard Dix, Preston Foster, Cliff Edwards and Big Boy Williams. When the villains began racing their horses up to the barricade, our heroes set fire to dozens of huge balls of brush entwined in barbed-wire. These flaming balls descended upon the villains in rapid succession and, in conjunction with the half-hundred giant arc lights which poured illumination onto the movie site, created a conflagration brilliant enough to dazzle the eyes and carry one's breath away.

In addition to the pyrotechnics emanating from these balls of silvery fire, a lighted torch was put to two buckboard wagons filled to the brim with inflammable material, and these were dumped right down on the old meanies too.

"Breezy" Eason, who directed, is an expert on scenes of this kind. The more dangerous they are, the better he likes 'em.

There are about 300,000 farms in Britain, covering some 37,000,000 acres. The arable land has been increased by 50 percent on pre-war to 18 million acres, largely by the labour of women and by a very great measure of mechanization — there are now nearly 60,000 women in the Women's Land Army.
