was jammed. Long lines of patient watchers stood in the streets outside. Police forces were doubled and within the tense house was absorbed in the strange drama of a Labor Prime Minister battling with those of whom three weeks ago he was leader.

The swift change about was bewildering in its complexities. Premier Ramsay MacDonald, with Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, Lord President of the Council, engaged in a sharp encounter with Right Hon. Arthur Henderson, once member of the Labor Cabinet, but now leader of the opposition. Right Hon. Winston Churchill spoke from the old Clyde side seat of James Maxton, member of Bridgetown, Glasgow, and Sir Oswald Mosley pressed the views of his little group from the corner where before the recess, Right Hon. David Lloyd George has showered epigrams.

The Prime Minister and leader of the opposition alike were interrupted so often, the speaker had to appeal for them both and both evidently felt the situation keenly. Mr. MacDonald, as he faced his old colleagues at times showed unaccustomed nervousness and yet had a ready retort for his interrupter. Mr. Henderson in his first essay as opposition leader was rather heavy in manner, but clear that so long as the Government lasted Labor intended to remain in opposition. He declared further: that he was proud of the fact that in the pre resignation negotiations he had headed the opposition to the cut in unemployment benefits.

Both Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Baldwin were in agreement that swift action by the formation of a National Government was the only course open to meet a situation of such gravity. Mr. Baldwin declared that when he left for Aix Les Bains he was convinced the Labor Government should fight out the situation for themselves. The Conservatives were willing to give them support in re establishing national credits. They had no desire to see the Government broken up. "Until I left London," Mr. Baldwin said, "I never heard of any idea of a National Government mentioned by any responsible person. It was not until the Sunday of two weeks ago that we were brought up against it." On that Sunday night it was clear the Government was unable to proceed and the formation of a National Government was the only alternative, he said. The Conservatives believed, Mr. Baldwin continued, that a protective tariff was the only effective remedy for an unfavorable balance of trade. But in view of the urgency of the situation the Conservatives had been willing to postpone consideration of the tariff. He paid a tribute to the courage of Mr. MacDonald, declaring, "we are going to see this matter through, we are going to give the Prime Minister full and hearty support to achieve the object for which this government was created."

Sir Oswald Mosley did not believe the measures proposed by the Government would meet the situation, but added that his group did not intend to offer factious opposition. He thought those who did not support the Government measures should be content in registering dissentment. Mr. Churchill, who was interrupted by a Laborite shout of "new Mussolini," was emphatic that there would be no revival of British industry until there was more tariff protection. He proclaimed also that there would be no restoration of confidence until the Socialists were decisively defeated at the polls. Referring to the joint Conservative and Liberal support of the Government, he exclaimed: "An unexpected convulsion has achieved what no argument could have accomplished. Now we are all together," he continued, and this remark brought loud ironical cheers from the Laborites. Mr. Churchill hoped that the new Government would make it clear it did not intend any great departure in the Indian policy.

Mr. Maxton scoffed at the Government proposals as mean, miserly and pettifogging, and as taking milk from the bottles of the unemployed. The vote was taken on a resolution calling for the House to resolve itself into a committee of ways and means on Thursday for the quick passage of economy and revenue measures designed to overcome the threatened but not deficit of $600,000,000. Mr. MacDonald had said this resolution would be taken as a test of confidence or non confidence in his Government. With the ample majority registered, it is believed the atmosphere was cleared for approval before the end of the week of urgent legislation that is expected to start new taxes rolling into the depleted exchequer. Mr. MacDonald appealed

AUDIENCE

George Fassnacht, Sr., Caliph, the High Priest, (Willard Kent) Pontius Pilate (Ben Roberts.) Herod, King of the Jews (Walter Cartwright) and Simon Peter (Henry Eitel.)

The Freiburg production has been performed in Freiburg, Germany. It is claimed, for six hundred years. Until the present time no performance has been given outside Germany.

The presentation in the Forum last night probably had a beginning somewhat like the famous Oberammergau Passion Play, which originated in a romantic episode, the product of simple hearts and an act of faith. The Oberammergau production dates back to the year 1633 when the inhabitants of Oberammergau, a little village in Germany made a vow that if God would rid them of a plague which had stricken the inhabitants of their village, they would on the Sundays of every tenth year reenact the scenes of Christ's stay on earth.

The plague almost immediately abated and soon entirely disappeared. The villagers then went to work to fulfill their vow. The original text and arrangements were written by the monks of Eitel, a monastery a little higher up the valley. The play required at that time all the inhabitants of the village and it was considered a disgrace if anyone, for some past misconduct, was refused a part. In 1814 the music now in use was composed by Rochus Dedler, a schoolmaster of the parish. Later the entire play was remodelled by the parish priest, to escape the general suppression of such performances by the Bavaria government. The plays were presented in the open air, at first no charge being made to spectators, but since their fame has spread so that thousands flock to view this old play, a charge was made, and the proceeds devoted to the good of the community.

The different characters in the Freiburg play, as in the Oberammergau production are usually hereditary and assigned as a reward for some moral trait.

The Fassnacht family have been presenting their production for five generations, portraying to the United States and Canada a charm similar to Oberammergau.

The Passion Play will be repeated at the Forum tonight and tomorrow evening, so that all desirous of seeing this magnificent spectacle will have the opportunity of doing so.

for the support of the House in his address.

"I appeal to all classes and conditions to accompany the government on the hard and broken road along which our security and honor and our well being have to be found," he said. "Little did we think when we bowed each other goodbyes on July 21 that the next meeting of Commons would show this revolutionary change." Then he launched immediately into his story of the British financial crisis. He declared the nation was facing a "test of democratic government." In 18 days $170,000,000 were withdrawn from the Bank of England owing to the shaken faith in British credits. "A typhoon was approaching and unless avoided it would pass over leaving widely spread wreckage behind," the Prime Minister said. "There was no time for fiddling while Rome burned. The only problem was to restore waning confidence, to stop the drain, to secure the loan necessary to give us a chance to rebuild our finances."

Mr. MacDonald used all the oratorical powers he possessed to convince his hearers of the gravity of the crisis. Criticisms of the banking systems and of all debts and reparations would come later, he said. None of them could be overlooked. He told of the effect of the world depression in Great Britain, of imports that exceed exports and of the danger of getting into the position of paying for imports from capital or by printed paper. The steady weekly compilation of unemployment figures affected confidence, he explained, and finally Sir George Hays' economy report, intended primarily for domestic guidance, became a great international document. "These and similar things caused the present crisis," the Prime Minister said. "The House of Commons cannot get away from its responsibility. It is something actually at our doors." The leader of the Government exerted himself to the utmost to convince the House that the Government had not been the victim of banks or international financial organizations.

"I wish to say specifically and emphatically," he said, "that never in the whole course of the negotiations carried on by the Chancellor and myself with the approval of the Government, did bankers interfere with political proposals.

EULA H. BREAKS TRACK RECORD AT HALIFAX

Paced the Three Fastest Heats in History of N. S. Oval.

(Canadian Press)

HALIFAX, N. S., Sept. 7.—Eula H. owned and driven by Billy Keys, St. Stephen, N.B., today lowered the Halifax Exhibition track record to 2:08, winning the free-for-all, wind up feature of the Nova Scotia exhibition harness racing card. Eula H. also paced the three fastest heats on record for the track 2:11 1/4; 2:08; 2:09 1/4.

The 2:17 Pace—Won by Lucky Lindy, with Aubrey the Great second, was marred in the second heat by a nasty spill. When almost in front of the grand stand on the first round of the oval, Maxine Great, driven by Johnny Conroy, Truro, went to a break and collided with Miss Winnipeg, driven by Billy Keys, St. Stephen, N.B. Both drivers were thrown and the sulky smashed. Aubrey the Great barely avoided the mix-up, but the wheel of the sulky caught and was torn off.

Hollywood Lee, from the Keys stable won the 2:17 trot in straight heats. Frank J. Ortolan was second. Best time, 2:13 1/4.

Single Todd, owned in Milltown, N.B., and driven by Johnny Conroy, took the 2:24 trot and pace in straight heats. The Willys, owned by McNeill, Charlottetown, was second. Best time, 2:15 1/4.

Million Dollar Fashion Palace For Toronto

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 8.—Women have taken an increasingly prominent part in the multifarious activities of the Canadian National Exhibition, and this year is no exception. Something new for them is a fashion show. A national style-demon has been born with the opening of this year's Canadian National Exhibition. There is a "fashion building" but it is only a faint indication of the fashion palace which is expected to be built here very long.

If plans of apparel manufacturers come true a million dollar fashion palace will be erected in two years. Leaders in the industry consider the time is ripe for such a step. In very recent years Canadian women have developed a feeling for clothes which manufacturers have been quick to realize.

BERLIN, Sept. 8.—The Sistine Madonna, Raphael's masterpiece, is back in its place on the Dresden Gallery after having been restored for the third time. Professor Krause and Kinkelin gave the canvas new pliancy by treating it for the back with wax and resin, then the surface of the painting was regenerated.

Canada Sells To Orient

(Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, Que., Sept. 8.—In a quiet, almost unobtrusive manner, a market, which absorbs more than fifty million dollars a year of Canadian products, has been built up in Japan and China. The September letter of the Royal Bank points out. It was not until a year ago that Canada sent its first representative business delegation to study the possibilities of closer trade relationships with the East, and it was only recently that the Canadian Government made provision for an adequate representation for the Commercial Intelligence Department in these countries.

In recent months the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has issued excellent bulletins mentioning the modern freight service available the kinds of goods in demand, describing the methods of advertising which are likely to prove effective, and commending the excellent contacts which have been established by the Canadian Trade Commissioners in these countries. Under the leadership of the Canadian Minister to Japan, the Trade Commissioners in the Orient are doing most excellent work.

It is a mistake to suppose that the buying power of China has been seriously curtailed by the decline in the value of silver. It is not with silver, but rather with goods and with remittances from China living in foreign countries, that China pays for her purchases in the West. It is a fact that the index number of prices in China has remained relatively stable during the past two years when the price indices of other countries have been falling rapidly. To the extent that there has been a general decline in the value of silver then in that of commodities, the general price in China have advanced and business has remained surprisingly prosperous considering the chaotic conditions which prevail. While the fall in Western prices brought about a severe decline in the dollar value of purchases in the East, goods from China are still being sold in Western markets and payment for these goods is being made in terms of products from the West. China does not ship silver to buy western products. Moreover, the decline in the volume of Chinese imports or exports is by no means so serious as the fall in the dollar value seems to indicate. Even in terms of dollar value, Chinese imports have fallen off less than those of most countries. Japan, like Canada, is on the gold standard and the value of her money has not been affected by changes in the price of silver. Gradually, new ideas and Western innovations are producing fundamental changes in long-established habits. New types of foods are being eaten, new kinds of clothing are worn, and new types of materials are required for the houses that are being built. Out of such changes has come a steadily increasing demand for a wider and wider variety of Western products.

KAYE DON, A TRUE BRITISH SPORTSMAN

English Challenger For Speedboat Cup Refused To Comment On Scurry Trick of American Rival, Who "Coaxed" The Britisher Over The Line Ahead of The Gun.

(Special to the Guardian)

DETROIT, Sept. 8.—Gar Wood today admitted that he deliberately tricked Kaye Don, British challenger, into a premature start in yesterday's second Harmsworth race, to disqualify his boat Miss England II. Although Wood in his more than a decade of Harmsworth defense, never had beaten the starting gun before, he took his Miss America IX across the starting line more than nine seconds ahead of the gun and Don, apparently fearful that the United States defender might get too much of an advantage, streaked after him. The British boat was more than seven seconds ahead of the gun.

Prior to the race, Wood had requested a 45 minute postponement to repair a newly discovered gaso-line tank leak. This was refused by Don, who explained that it would necessitate his taking his boat back to the boat well, emptying his oil tanks and reheating the lubrication oil. Wood pointed out that he had several times in past races agreed to postponements requested by foreign challengers. "When they told me I couldn't have it, Wood said, I made up my mind I would show Don a trick or two. We soldered up the spot hurriedly, but one of my mechanics was hauled out of the hull unconscious doing so. I planned the start. I said I would be over that line first if I were a minute ahead of the gun and if Don wanted to follow me, that was his business. Everything went off just as we planned."

Don's Refusal Justified

Race officials announced that on refusal of the request on ground that it would necessitate returning to his boat well to warm up again 35 gallons of lubricating oil. He said that if Wood had but one boat in the race he gladly would have agreed to the postponement, but felt that with two boats entered against him and one of them in good shape, the race should start on time. Don did not discuss the start. His United States manager Wm. Sturm, however, commented that Gar Wood evidently knows lots of the tricks in the racing game.

Wins Air Derby At Toronto Fair

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 8.—Flying over a field of gypsy moth pupae, a small Ontario, W. N. Miller, of Newmarket roared past the finishing stand at six o'clock tonight to win the $2,500 cash prize in the Canadian National Exhibition air derby. He had covered a zig zag route from Toronto to Windsor and back in five hours, 51 minutes 27 and four fiftieths of seconds.

Two minutes behind Miller came a flock of planes fighting for second place. W. Drury in a Curtiss Rambler had a margin of 20 seconds over Beverley Biscoe, who used an Aero Sport model. Norm Irwin, a gypsy moth was just five seconds slower than Biscoe, but four seconds faster than Jack Yonge of Toronto, who flew another moth. Drury wins $1,500, Biscoe, $750 and Irwin $250.

All machines starting this morning had been carefully handicapped, according to their highest flying speed, so that the victory might go to the pilot with the greatest flying and navigating ability. Miller had an advantage of nearly one hour over the scratch plane a fast pup moth, Biscoe advantage of one hour and 14 minutes; Drury 50 minutes. The planes were obliged to stop for one hour at London Windsor and Kitchener. They were also required to check at Hamilton, Brantford, Sarnia, Stratford and Guelph. Of thirty-one planes which started more than twenty finished within half an hour of each other.

An interesting feature of the case is a question of the nationality of the accused, who in the 20 years since the crime was committed has become a reputable business man. The question of nationality is being dealt with by the Egyptian and Greek law officers. The prisoner, Gregory Doucas, a native of Cyprus, is alleged to have killed a compatriot in Greece 20 years ago and got out of the country. The Athens assizes condemned him by default to death. Doucas came to Egypt and settled down here. In due course Cyprus changed hands, and under the regulations relating to the new regime Doucas became a local (Egyptian) subject. He opened a baker's shop in the Moharran quarter of Alexandria and set up a thriving trade. He married and had five children. Doucas shelters himself behind his local nationality, and the authorities have now to decide whether he can be extradited or what should be done in his case after these 21 years of exemption.

LOOKING 'EM OVER

(By Tec.)

The entire sporting world will look with regret and some disapproval on the unfortunate and unsportsmanlike climax to the famous Harmsworth Trophy races, emblematic of the world's speedboat championship, which was held by Gar Wood, of United States. Every attempt to lift the coveted trophy from Wood has been followed by ill-luck. Even today Kaye Don, with easily the fastest craft, Miss England II, remains the challenger. His brilliant victory over the two United States defenders on Saturday last stamped him the new champion, but there's always a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip, and the intrepid Englishman finds himself today a beaten challenger, tricked out of a title which might have been rightfully his.

Don was the challenger competing against two American boats on a point system best two out of three heats. The ruling was, that any craft going over the line before the starting gun, would be immediately disqualified. Wood's Miss America IX sprung a leak in one of her tanks some time before the start of the race. He asked for time to repair it. Don, knowing that two boats were pitted against him, refused the request. In the meantime, Wood made temporary repairs, and led the Britisher over the line ahead of the gun, while his sister boat, Miss America VIII raced after them well in the rear and inside the time limit. The result was that Miss England and Miss America IX were disqualified while the other Yankee defender coasted the course to victory and the title—a very empty one.

On a point system of 5, 3 and 1 the final count would be: Miss America VIII, a third and first equaling 6 points; Miss England, a first, 5 points and Miss America IX, a second, equaling 3 points. The race is now history; the cup is still sitting pretty for another year—perhaps forever so far as an English challenger is concerned. At any rate, should they race again next year, it is a cinch the point system will be eliminated and every heat will be a race.

"Ballyhoo, Thing of Past"

There will be one thing about hockey this year that no highly touted stars will be coming up from the amateur ranks to dazzle and distort the viewpoint under the impetus of high pressure ballyhoo. A few years ago, when the Grads Granites, Greyhounds and other top line teams were holding forth at the top of their lungs there was great scrambling and manoeuvring to obtain services of high priced stars with the result that some of those who came up did so at a price that exceeded the stipend paid to tried and true performers of several years standing. The idea flourished for a while but it didn't work out so well and the clubs are now figuring more on the development from farms and from minor league pro teams.

London's Gay Lights Are Making History

(Canadian Press)

LONDON, Sept. 8.—Flood-lighting in London in connection with the International Illumination Congress is going to be on a much larger scale than at first intended and for a longer period too. The special lighting was originally intended to last only a week from the opening of the Congress, September 1, but it has been decided to keep it going almost four weeks, between September 1 and 26. London an hour or so after sunset will be a city of light in which sightseers will view historic buildings and familiar thoroughfares in a setting never before experienced. Picturesque as was the experimental illumination on the evening of July 21, the actual display will be much more impressive. In many cases the lighting will be three times as powerful as during the initial tests.

British Singers Are Booked

(Canadian Press)

LONDON, Sept. 8.—Most of the best-known British opera singers, and an all-British orchestra chorus and ballet are to appear in the six weeks' season of opera which will open at Covent Garden on Sept. 14. This will be the first season to be given in London by the Covent Garden English Company, although this company has been playing for two years in the principal cities of England and Scotland.

The repertoire consists of 13 operas, including five works to be performed for the first time by the English Company—"The Bartered Bride," "The Wreckers," "The Valkyrie," "Parsifal," and "Carmen." The other operas which will be given are La Boheme, Madame Butterfly, Tosca, The Barber of Seville, Die Fledermaus, Aida, Lohengrin, and The Mastersingers.

The conductors will be Adrian Boult, John Barbirolli and Frederick Moor, who has been the producer in recent International Seasons. The season will serve to introduce to opera several young orchestral players of great promise who have been discovered in various colleges.

After the season at Covent Garden the company will leave for an eight weeks' tour of the provinces, during which seasons will be given at Glasgow, Edinburgh, Liverpool and Birmingham.
