He forgot Paul Tache. Spots of red came into his cheeks as ToINETTE's surprised eyes greeted him. She almost smiled, and as if something made her forgetful of her magnificence and the dignity it imposed, she extended her hand to receive the package. The manner in which she accepted his gift sent the blood racing through his body. The color deepened in her cheeks, and, mistaking this for still greater evidence of the pleasurable thrill he had given her, Jeems was sure she was about to thank him for his gift, when Paul stood beside them. Ignoring Jeems, ToINETTE's cousin led her away, politely relieving her of the package as they went. It was then ToINETTE turned to smile at Jeems, in spite of the eyes she knew were watching her. In this same moment her escort allowed the package to drop surreptitiously from his hand.

This act, inspired by a contempt for the forest boy, and urged by a meanness of spirit hidden under a display of wealth and fine clothes, swept Jeems's thought from ToINETTE, whose nearness of person, surprising beauty, and sweetness of disposition had almost made him forget his one reason for being at Lussan's sale. This weakness in the armor of his intentions was sealed when he saw his present fall to the ground. ToINETTE became instantly immaterial in the path of a storm of emotion which caught and held him fiercely. He saw only one person where there were two, and that one was Paul Tache. In a brain white with heat, and in eyes blinded by the presence of all living forms except that of the youth who had darkened his mind with bitterness, ToINETTE ceased to exist for him, and when he sprang forward to recover the bundle, it was not with the thought that he was rescuing it for her, but that it was to be his reason for glorious war when the moment was at hand for him to hurl it in his rival's face.

Detaching themselves from the shifting groups of which they had been a part, ToINETTE and young Tache strolled to their horses, knowing that many glances followed their elegant departure. Giving themselves a brief time in which to be admired, they sauntered into the gardens back of Lussan's house. Jeems was only a few steps from Paul and ToINETTE when they disappeared behind the house. He held back with a feeling of satisfaction when he saw the two going down a path which took them out of sight of any curious eyes that might have watched them. Not until the last flutter of ToINETTE's skirt was gone did he proceed with the business of following them, and then, like an Indian, he slipped noiselessly along the path and found them standing, somewhat perplexed, at the edge of a soggy and ill-smelling open space where Lussan had built his barn and wherein his cattle and pigs had gathered for so long that one was sure of a precarious and unpleasant footing. ToINETTE, her chin tilted, a flash of indignation in her eyes as she held up her skirt, with both hands, was on the point of losing her wrath upon her escort for daring to bring her to such a place of defilement when Jeems stepped out from a rim of bushes and confronted them.

His face was pale. His slim body was as taut as a bowstring. His eyes were almost black. He did not see ToINETTE, scarcely knew that she was in his world, even as her anger gave place to an exclamation of surprise when she saw in his hand the package which he had given her a few minutes before he approached Paul Tache, and that youth, misinterpreting the slowness of his movement and the bloodless pallor of his face as signs of embarrassment and fear, sought to cover his disgrace in ToINETTE's eyes by an explosion of haughty protest at being followed and spied upon in this way. Jeems made no reply except to hold out the package. Sight of it choked the words in the other's throat. Jeems's silence and the way in which he continued to extend the package brought a deep color into Paul's face. He and not Jeems was conscious of the amazement in ToINETTE's countenance and of the intensity of her interest in the situation. He recovered himself swiftly and with a gulfing change of manner, held out his hand.

"Pardon me," he apologized. "It is good of you to bring the package—which I accidentally dropped." Jeems came a step nearer. "You lie!" he cried, and with a furious movement he hurled the bundle at Tache's face.

The force of the blow sent Paul reeling backward, and Jeems was at him with the quickness and passion of one suddenly transformed by madness. He had never fought with another boy. But he knew how an maul clawed and disemboweled. In a hundred ways he had viewed strife and death as the wilderness knew these things. And all that he had witnessed, all that he had known of torture and violence and the desire to main and kill gave to his action a character of a shrill little scream from ToINETTE.

Jeems heard the scream, but it held no significance for him now. His dreams were gone, and ToINETTE, her presence close to him, her eyes upon the battle just as he had imagined in the thrill of his mental vision, was forgotten in the more vital depths of his interest in the flesh and blood of Paul. In the first attack, his fingers clutched like small iron claws in the folds of Tache's cravat and coat, and the rending of cloth, a spitting asunder of gorgeous material almost to the other's waist, was evidence of the strength behind his assault. He followed this with a fury of scratching and tearing and both went down in the melee. When they rose Paul heaving himself up with an effort which flung Jeems from him, they were such a sight of muck and stain that ToINETTE forgot her precious dress and covered her eyes in horror. But she was looking again in an instant, for the spectacle fascinated even as it appalled her. Jeems had landed on his feet with a fat load of mud, and this he projected with an aim so accurate that half of Paul's face was obliterated by it, and as he leapt with a roar of rage at his smaller assailant, he was such a shocking contrast to his usual immaculate self that ToINETTE nearly ceased to breathe. Then she saw and heard what her feminine eyes and instincts could not understand or keep proper count of, a mad twisting and tumbling of bodies, panting breaths, grunts, and finally a clearly audible curse from Paul Tache. With that sound Jeems flew backward and landed on his back.

He was up almost before he had struck, and with his head ducked low like a ram's in a charge, he hurled himself at Tache. This individual, having cleared his eyes sufficiently to perceive the blindness of the other's rush, stepped aside and swung a well-directed blow which again sent Jeems down into the muck. His hand filled itself with this sticky substance a second time, and as he returned to battle he let it fly at Paul. Profiting by experience, Paul dodged skillfully, and the volley passed over his head, spreading in its flight, and fell in its contaminating virulence upon ToINETTE. She saw her raiment spotted and defiled, and such a sudden fury rose in her that she sprang upon Jeems as he clawed and kicked in a clinch with Paul, and assailed him with all the strength and bitterness of her small fists and biting tongue.

PILCHARD OIL IN POULTRY FEEDING
(Experimental Farms Note)

The efficiency of cod liver oil in poultry feeding has been definitely established both upon a scientific and a practical basis. Owing mainly to the fact that suitable cod fishing areas are localized and in many instances distant from centres of rural and urban population, costs of transportation have considerably increased the price of this product in some districts. As a result variety of body oils from a great variety of fish have been biologically tested in the hope that they might be as potent in vitamins as cod liver oil and be cheaper and more readily available in the districts concerned. Suitable species of cod for the production of cod liver oil upon a commercial basis do not exist on the Pacific coast of Canada. Oil is obtained, however, from the body of the pilchard, a fish which is netted in large quantities upon the British Columbia coast. This oil is palatable, low in free fatty acids and can be fairly cheaply produced. Cod liver oil contains vitamin A which is growth producing and vitamin D which prevents rickets and permits of normal bone formation. In experiments with chicks recently completed at the Poultry Division, Central Experimental Farm, pilchard oil from the British Columbia coast was proven to be as potent as a good grade of poultry cod liver oil in both vitamins A and D. Consequently, when of good quality, it may substitute for cod liver oil for poultry feeding. Owing to transportation costs for cod liver oil as mentioned above, pilchard oil will without doubt substitute for cod liver oil to great extent in British Columbia, and still compete with cod liver oil in price. Since pilchard oil has been used in the past mainly for industrial purposes with a low return to the producers it is confidently hoped, in view of the apparent qualities of the oil, that it will be available at a very reasonable price for poultry use.

Care Of Roses

Roses require fairly deep cultivation and heavy fertilizing up until the first of July in order to push growth and produce flowers. After this, however, it is advisable to slow down so that the plants may get hardened before the cold weather sets in. To aid in this process, which takes two or three months, it is a good plan to plant a few low-growing plants, such as pansies, calendulas, violets, or dwarf nasturtiums, around the roses, which will brighten up the bed and benefit the bushes by absorbing moisture. At this time a good quick-acting fertilizer is advised. After July, however, a slower fertilizer, such as liquid manure, or bone meal should be used.

Celery Out Now

Contrary to somewhat general opinion, celery is not a difficult plant to grow and a large quantity can be produced in a very small space thus putting this vegetable in the city garden class. The first rows for early use should be put out any time now, with the main planting about the first week in July. Plants are produced from seed sown in the hotbed, or they may be purchased from almost any corner store at this time. The ideal soil is a very rich well-drained muck, though practically any combination will do, so long as we fertilize well, have good drainage and apply lots of water. Give the plants from six to eight inches each way, and rows may be as close together as we like after making allowances for cultivation. Keep the ground thoroughly worked up all the time. Light applications of nitrate of soda just after the plants are set out and again in two or three weeks will help.

growth along wonderfully. The simplest way to bleach celery in the fall is to place boards close up against the plants on both sides of the row, and bank with earth. In the fall plants may be lifted without bleaching and stored, tightly placed together in bushel baskets in some dark place and they will be white and tender in a week or ten days.

BLOOMS THAT LAST ALL WINTER

Even in Canada gardening need not be confined to a summer hobby as one can extend the season practically the whole year round. To the person who has a supply of everlasting type flowers and some winter blooming bulbs for forcing, the first killing frost which turns a garden of beauty into a drab, tangled mass of twisted, blackened stems, the regret is less keen than with the neighbor not so blessed. There is a considerable list of flowers which produce blooms that can be dried and made into attractive bouquets for winter use. Chief among these is the Heliopsis or strawflower. This is a hardy annual about two feet high, producing large different colored blooms until late in the season. Another one is the Rhodanthe which bears silvery, rose-tinted flowers. The Statice comes in mauve, white and primrose and combinations of the three. A fourth is the Acaenium which may be had in a white or a bright rose. All these annuals in addition to their winter bouquet qualities will make a splendid show in the garden during the summer and early fall, as well. For preserving the flowers one should pick just before opening full and hang upside down, in a dark, warm place to dry. The Chinese Lantern plant is also grown for permanent indoor decoration as the pods turn bright red and puff up like Chinese Lanterns when dry.

Plant Food

Well rotten manure is almost indispensable in any garden and works in particularly well with commercial fertilizers, supplying the humus which the chemicals lack. But in the average city or town in this day of motor transport it is very difficult and often impossible to get real well-rotted manure and the straw substitute offered will take years of weathering to break down and become of much value. One can get around this difficulty by purchasing pulverized sheep manure which every seed dealer carries. This material has another advantage in that, it is heated while being processed, which kills any weed seeds. When one gets a load of the ordinary manure he must be prepared for a fresh crop of weeds. Pulverized sheep manure used for enriching the soil and adding humus, with a nitrogen commercial fertilizer to hasten growth in both vegetable and flower garden, makes a good combination.

Murderer Is Still At Large

LOTBINIERE, Que., June 14—(By The Canadian Press)—Strenuous work by 35 of his men has so far yielded no definite clues to the identification of the murderers of Simon Bernard, local notary, Rosario Lemire, chief of the Provincial Police department, stated tonight.

Murder of Notary Bernard and the painful wounding of his daughter, Marie, early Wednesday morning, by men who unsuccessfully attempted to rob the local branch of La Banque Provinciale has been the sensation of the usually peaceful farming district of Lotbiniere. Miss Marie Bernard's condition continues to improve.
