

HEINZ TREATS Vinegars AS VINTNERS TREAT Wines

It's not enough that the barley, corn and rye Heinz uses to make White and Malt Vinegar should be the best the market affords. Not enough to use only whole, firm, healthy apples to make Heinz Cider Vinegar. That's a fine start, but it's only the beginning.

Months of maturing in wood before bottling—that's an important reason why Heinz Vinegars give you a mellow bouquet, a fruity lasting tang that makes salads and a hundred different dishes taste better. That's the flavour that assures prize-winning pickles. Taste vinegar as Heinz makes it—that's the best way to find out how good Heinz Vinegars are.

Heinz Olive Oil is another pantry necessity. From the first pressing of fine olive groves grown near Heinz own plant at Seville, Spain. Clearer, Smoother. More flavoured. Remember the name—HEINZ.

"Flavour Medic" a booklet with scores of original, clever recipes for salad dressings, sauces, candy, frostings, desserts and cooking—made thrilling with Heinz Vinegars—sent Free. H. J. Heinz Company, Toronto, Ont.

SARATOGA By ANITA LOOS

"The only thing I can think of is that he may be worrying about that daughter of his."
"What's wrong with her? No bad news is there?"
"Oh, I mean he probably misses her more than he'll admit—maybe he's worried for fear he might suddenly have some no-account foreign son-called nobleman wished on him for a son-in-law."
"If that's all, he's a bigger fool than any son of mine has a right to be. No need to worry about Carol. She'll marry the right man. Lots of foolish notions she's got maybe, wanting to visit moujy old castles and traipse around in titles, but that's only a part of her and being young. That young woman, let me tell you, has her feet on the ground, as you'll see for yourself, when she comes home. You and she will hit it off well, I—"

There were cries from the house and a figure running toward them. It was Rosetta, the big good-natured, colored maid.

"Come quick," she was yelling. "Miss Carol's on the telephone, asking for her daddy. That's what they said anyway—I said to wait—I can't talk all the way to England, not for anybody or anything."

"You go," said the older man. "You can get there faster than I can and I'd probably run the bill up, bawling her out—I always seem to scrap with that girl."
Duke was half way to the house before the old man finished the sentence. He was glad it had turned out this way, there were certain things he wanted to say to Carol Clayton.

"Daddy darling—I'm engaged—to Hartley Madison—you know the Newport Madison—arent' you happy?"

"This isn't Daddy," answered Duke and there was sharpness in his voice as well as his words "and I'm not so interested in your affairs except to say you'd better get your hat and coat and come home as fast as you can get here."

"May I ask who is speaking to me in such a tone?" said Carol, in a voice even icier than Duke's had been. "And will you have the ordinary decency to let me know why when I ask for my father—"

"This is Duke Bradley of whom you have heard, although we have never had the pleasure of meeting. As for your father's answering, he's down at the doctor's and his heart is answering the stethoscope probably. It should be I tell you."
He could not know that her hand was trembling, her eyes were wide with terror and he did not hear the little gasp she gave. All he heard was her voice, which sounded hard.

If he is ill, why wasn't I told? Of course, he wouldn't want to scare me or Grandfather, but you seem to be able and willing to attend to other people's business, and—"

"How could we let you know?" He was furious now. "You haven't seemed much interested in what might be going on at home, and then you send a cable to address you at Southborough House."

"Well, what else would I do? I'm phoning from there now."
"You'd suppose there was only one house in all England—and I'd of cities and towns, even."

"Everybody knows where Southborough House is," she was condescending now. "The Duke of Southborough—"

"Take the crown off your head and—"
He heard her bang the receiver down. From the door came a laugh. Grandfather Clayton had followed him. He wondered how much he had heard, but one look at his face told him he had heard only the end.

"Figured I'd better step up—maybe something was wrong with Carol, but from the way you were lashing her, everything must be O. K. Want anything special?"

"Just to tell she's engaged to the rich young Madison—and I think, though she didn't say it in so many words, she'll be coming home soon."

"Wants to show him off, I suppose. Well, I've no objection to meeting him—anybody else for that matter. Coming back down to the stables with me?" as he went through the door.

Duke shook his head, saying something about having some important phone calls to make. It was only an excuse. He wanted to see Jim Clayton and see him alone, when he came in. In a few minutes he heard his step. A quick glance at his face told nothing.

"Nothing to worry about, Duke," was the answer to the question which was not asked. "Oh, of course, he said to go a little easy all the other things doctors always say. What have you been doing?"

"Just now I've been talking with your daughter. Nothing wrong—she just phoned because she wanted to tell you some big news and was it a let-down when she found herself talking to a perfect stranger—or an imperfect one, she might think."

"What was the news?"

"She's engaged to Hartley Madison—the of the Madisons she seems to think."
"Don't get any wrong ideas about Carol, Duke. She's had enough to turn any girl's head, but she'll never go high-hat. Hartley Madison—what have I heard of him? Well never mind, we'll hear enough."
He had risen and gone into the next room, telling Duke to wait for him. When he returned, he held them out to Duke.

"There's to be no argument," he said. "You are to take this and keep it until I pay you. Brookdale is worth a lot more than my debt to you and I'm using it for security. And I don't want to listen to any of your talk about my luck changing and the law of averages. I now all that—"

Jim. I couldn't. I won't. What do you think of me?"
Out any fine talk. I'll feel easier if you have this. Of course, I'll have the cash soon—and then you'll be nearer having your pile and leaving the tracks behind forever and—just what is it you've always wanted to do? Oh yes, sing."
As Duke still did not take the papers, he said: Please, Duke. Doctors are old fogies, but I do feel a little tired and want to turn in."
The younger man was left standing alone in the room, holding the papers in his hand.

Carol had had her first encounter with the Bradleys and discovered that she is as indomitable a person as she is herself. Will she heed his warning about her father's ill health? Be sure to read tomorrow's exciting installment.

CHAPTER III

Although they sailed home within two days and on the fastest boat ever built, the voyage seemed almost endless to Carol. She urged Hartley not to cut short his vacation she would be quite all right, especially as one of her teachers would be on the boat to teach her. But he would not hear of being separated from her. Before they left, she had spoken over the phone to her father and his voice reassured her. She said playfully she would like to have him send a radio to her each day, so people would know she was important. Surely, she would say to herself when fear refused to be banished, everything was all right; it was only that horrible upstart of a Duke Bradley who for some reason had wanted to hurt her.

They were to arrive in Saratoga on one of the big race days of the season. Trains were too slow, only a plain would be an antidote to Carol's impatience. When their car stopped at Brookdale, Carol had jumped out almost before it stopped. The door was open and she ran in, only to run out again, her face glowing with happiness.

"They're at the races," she cried. "So Daddy must be all right."
Carol was conscious of the sensation they created when they reached her head. Perhaps she held her head a little higher than usual, perhaps there was a little more of what she believed to be an Oxonian accent when she spoke to old friends who greeted her, perhaps she was a trifle too graciously formal to people she had known all her life. Hartley's distinction, the knowledge that no woman in all the gay crowd was more beautiful or more smartly gowned than she, the excitement of coming back in triumph may have turned her head.

There were raised eyebrows and shrugs of shoulders as they pushed their way through the crowd, but even the most scathing critic would have had nothing to find fault with when she saw her grandfather.

"You old darling," she said, running to him. "How are you—did you get my message I'd be here—where's Daddy—any of the horses you know running—"

"Humph," said the old man. "You can talk as fast as ever, even if you do sound kind of funny. And stop hugging me and introduce this young man. Seems to me we've known each other."
"I have completely lost my head," said Carol, as the two men shook hands.

"Never had any to lose, I'd say," grunted the old man.

"And Rosetta, you darling—Hartley, this is my nurse. How I got along without her these two years I don't know, but when we're married, she's coming with me, aren't you, you bossy old thing."

BLOOD
Eczema or Salt Rheum as it is often called is one of the most agonizing of skin diseases. The intense burning, itching, smarting, especially at night, or when the affected part is exposed to heat, or the hands placed in water, are almost unbearable. Use Burdock Blood Bitters internally, and apply it externally. A few bottles are usually sufficient to afford relief from this torturing blood and skin disease.

Modern Mills Amaze Eastern Woman

Like most women, Mrs. Bennoch has hitherto been more interested in getting good results from flour than she has been in seeing how it is milled. But she has returned from a visit to the three great modern plants operated by Robin Hood Mills Limited on the Western Prairies, amazed at the endless precautions taken to produce pure flour. In a recent interview, Mrs. Bennoch said:
"We women may not think that the way flour is milled has anything much to do with the flavor of our bread and cakes—but with my own eyes I have peeped behind the scenes and believe me there are some facts about milling flour that every woman ought to know. I cannot describe machinery, for it always confuses me, but I can describe some of the methods by which flour is kept pure and maintained at the same high standard of baking quality year after year."

VISITED MILLS

"I visited the Robin Hood flour mills in Calgary, Saskatchewan and Moose Jaw. I knew that these mills used only Western Canadian Hard Spring Wheat, but I didn't realize that wheat after it comes to their mills. First of all, I saw a battery of big magnets that are passed over the wheat to draw out any bits of metal which might have got into it. Then the Superintendent showed me the wind and suction machines that blow straw and dust and light seeds from among the wheat kernels. But that time the wheat seemed clean enough to me—but the Superintendent said "Here's where our cleaning process really begins."

WASHED IN WATER

"He took up a handful of wheat berries and told me to examine them very carefully. 'You see' he said, 'there is still a little film of grime over the whole berry, and in the crease here, a little black deposit of dirt. The only way you can get rid of that grime and dirt is actually to wash the kernels in water. Now, I'll show you how we do it.'"

"Every woman who uses flour should see these washing machines work. They seem to operate on exactly the same principle as my own washer at home. And I could scarcely believe it when I saw the muddy stream which was carried away from the wheat that had seemed so clean. The Superintendent pointed to the muddy water flowing away from the washer. 'In our Mills,' he said, 'that dirt goes down a drain. In Mills that do not wash their wheat it goes straight into the flour. It takes more than 1,000 gallons of water daily to keep these machines running, but they're worth it.'"

SIEVED THROUGH SILK

Mrs. Bennoch told also of another of the processes used in milling this great modern flour. "Did you know" she said, "the flour passes through more than a mile of silk—real silk that is actually ten times finer than a silk stocking. No wonder Robin Hood mixes so well with other ingredients in baking and rises so well in bread!"

CONTROLLED HOURLY

Mrs. Bennoch also visited the mill-control laboratories where the flour is tested every hour of every day. She said "I asked the chemist what the cute little loaves he was baking were for." He explained that they were test loaves and dozens of them are baked every day. "He showed me how the superior gluten in Robin Hood gives the dough greater strength and liveliness, and demonstrated again how the wheat washing process makes for greater purity in the flour." As I was leaving I told him how much I had enjoyed the visit and how I was really realizing what a wonderful science modern milling is. He agreed with me and when I again mentioned what washing he said "We pioneered in the wheat washing process because we knew that women everywhere are demanding purer and better food. Some day all flours will have to be milled from washed wheat because it is just as necessary to wash wheat as it is to wash radishes or onions or potatoes for your table."

Confederation Life to Open Branch Office In Egypt

Announcement of the decision of the Confederation Life Association to enter Egypt was made by the President, Mr. C. S. Macdonald upon his recent return to Toronto from an inspection trip that took him around the world. In extending its operations to Egypt, the Association increases to twenty-two, the number of countries outside Canada in which it is doing business.

Accompanied by Mr. C. D. Devlin, General Superintendent of Agencies, Mr. Macdonald, visited the Association's branches in the United Kingdom; Singapore, Hongkong, Shanghai, and Hawaii and in addition studied thoroughly business conditions in Egypt, India, Ceylon and Japan.

Sales Conferences were held at Shanghai, the Association's principal Oriental branch, opened in 1932 and also at Hongkong. After a brief visit to Japan they crossed to Hawaii where another highly successful branch of the Confederation Life Association is maintained.

Interviewed following his return home, Mr. Macdonald stated that carefully selected branches of insurance companies located in foreign countries were doing well. Prospects were particularly favorable in those areas in the Near and Far East in which people from western countries were located in numbers.

Opportunities for writing insurance on behalf of native populations also existed. In this connection, however, a lot of educational work had to be done along the lines of insurance protection. For operations in these fields, staffs had to be carefully selected and trained.

Paying tribute to the British supervision of India's affairs, Mr. Macdonald saw no evidence of real discontent in that country. There was a realization that Britain's guiding influence was needed in a domain having such a variety of religions and governing bodies.

Wool Week—June 14th to 19th

will be a special week during which sheep breeders are asked to cooperate and ship wool to the SHEEP BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION, CHARLOTTETOWN. If you are not able to ship during this special period, it will be all right to send it in any time before July 1st.

THE CANADIAN COOPERATIVE WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION LIMITED, which markets your product, will pay through the Provincial Association CASH on delivery for tied, unwashed wool, NOT LESS THAN 23c PER POUND. At the same time, each shipper will participate in any profits that may be derived from the year's sales. Last year's contributors received 2c per pound extra in this way.

Kindly observe the following rules:
Tie all fleeces with PAPER TWINE OR WOOLEN STRING; DO NOT USE BINDER TWINE; paper twine can be purchased from the Sheep Breeders' Association. Wool should not be washed; each fleece should be tied separately and neatly at the aring time; washing wool lowers its value and gives extra work. Do not pay the freight; in order to reduce freight costs, ship your wool collectively through your Shipping Club Institute Secretary, or any local group; each shipper's lot should be properly marked. Use old bags or useless rugs; do not send anything of any value. Write your name and address plainly on the shipping ticket; put one ticket inside the sack and another on the outside for fear the other one may be torn off and then we could not identify your lot; on this ticket also give the number of bales you are shipping. Address all bundles to WOOL GRADING STATION, CHARLOTTETOWN.

The following local agents will take care of your wool and ship to the Association: W. B. McLellan, Alma; Louis McMillan, Miscouche; Cyrus F. Gallant, Wellington; Peter McIsaac, Souris; George McInnis, St. Peter; Mont Anner, Montague; W. D. Ross, Uxg.
