THE PERCENTAGE PASSES

enough, this is exactly the number of students whom "Parent" thinks a reasonable number to fail! I have no doubt but that "Educationalist" with his prodigious knowledge of Mathematics could utterly quash my feeble effort at a defence of the P. W. College system by the use of digits. My facts are approximately correct, however, and we can hereafter take it as an established fact that the number of students who seem at all likely to pass, and write subsequently "slaughtered," form but fifteen per cent. of the total number at P.W.C. I am, Sir, etc.,

PEDAGOGUE.

P. of W. College Curriculum

Sir,—May I be permitted one word more on the question of the Prince of Wales curriculum. What I have to say, while very obvious, seems to be overlooked again and again by those who are at present discussing the question in your columns.

Educator is administered the world over by institutions of three distinct types.—(1) Primary or Common schools; (2) Preparatory Colleges, High Schools, or Collegiate Institutes; (3) Universities. Prince of Wales College falls into the second class, viz: Preparatory College. As such it has a perfectly definite position and an absolutely definite work to do. It must bring its students to the point at which university work begins. Let me say here that I am not ascribing the training of students for universities as the object—sole object—of P.W.C. Just as our public schools are supposed to bring their pupils to P.W.C. matriculation standard, while the majority of these students have no intention of attending P.W.C.; so that college itself has university matriculation for its standard. In fact, University matriculation marks the end of high school work. It can be seen that P.W.C. must teach certain subjects and that its choice is limited.

This is an elementary fact, but one which I have said is often overlooked. For example:—

"Educationalist" talks — more than once—of mathematics as the foundation of scientific formulae. But to get to a position where he bothers to any degree with science a student must attend university, where highly trained, highly-paid men instruct him. To be allowed to go there—even if solely for matriculation—a student must have at least as much Latin as is taught at P.W.C. In other words the classics, to date, seem to be an essential before science can be studied.

Let me point out that this system, however faulty, is none of Prince of Wales College's doing.

The main criticism offered by "Educationalist" is that classics are accentuated and that the standard is too high. I have already dealt with the first point in so far as it affects or can be altered by those who run P.W.C.

As to the second—to talk of 65 per cent as high is to say something entirely without meaning; 65 per cent may be high or it may be low. To regard only the number is to err. Let me illustrate

A student in 1st year Arts at the University of Toronto, must obtain at least 65 per cent to enter in Political Science or Philosophy of the 2nd year. Students in 1st year engineering at the same institution are required to obtain 33 per cent to proceed to second year. By the numerical system, it is almost exactly twice as difficult in Arts as in Engineering. This is absurd. My point is that little or nothing can be gained by regarding numbers. It would in fact be quite easy to lower P.W.C. requirements to 50 per cent and at the same time to raise the academic standard.

To my mind we should look at the University for our facts. Does P.W.C. more than cover the preparatory work? In other words, does its work trespass on that of the universities? If so, lower the
