Mill Property and Farm For Sale in Suffolk

This property which consists of 140 acres of land and known as "Thompson's Mill and Farm" is situated in Suffolk, 9 miles from Charlottetown.
There is on this property one of the best water powers on the Island, a large Grist Mill and Kila and a Saw-Mill with space above which was formerly used as a Carding-Mill. There is also a good stand of lumber on the back of the farm.
There is a large and comfortable dwelling house with wood house attached, machine house and two large barns on this property.
It is conveniently situated to school, churches, butter factory and is 1 1/2 miles from Suffolk Station. The Mill pond is entirely on the land of the above property and the dam could be raised over one foot and not encroach on any other persons land. This would be an ideal site for an Electric Light Plant and well suited for muskrat farming.
If not sold privately will be advertised and offered for sale by auction later.
For further particulars apply to the owner on the premises.

CURSE O' LOVE

A Story of Love and its Test
By MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 50.
THE NEWCOMER

FOR weeks Norma was very ill. Her life was almost despaired of. Her father had arrived in all haste and stayed at her bedside, a pathetic, terrified old man. Ada Lind was nearly as anxious and devoted. She recklessly abandoned her beauty treatments to be on call in case Norma had need of her.

But Norma dragged herself slowly back from the gates of Death. She had the resistance of her sturdy ancestors to help her, even though she was without desire to live.

It was not until she was about again that Ada ventured to say to her: "My dear child, when I showed you the opal, I didn't suspect that it had been in your possession."

Norma smiled wanly as she lay on her couch in the sun-parlor of the suite her father had engaged for her, and Ada continued: "You poor, poor child! I'll never forgive myself. Fancy talking of jewels when you were so—"

Norma stretched out an imploring hand.

"Please—I want to talk of jewels now—one jewel anyway. Will you bring me the black opal?" She shuddered, but her eyes were resolute.

Ada hesitated.

"Wait until you're stronger," she temporized. "Do you know, I'm beginning to be positively afraid of the thing. It seems so involved with unhappiness and tragedy."

Norma shook her head.

"Everything truly beautiful brings its share of unhappiness. But we mustn't let ourselves be fateful. I want to see it again. I'm sure it must be the same stone."

"You've seen it before?" asked Ada puzzled.

"Bring it, and I'll tell you."

When Ada had obeyed, half-fearfully, Norma held the black opal for a long time in her hand. She closed her eyes and thought, as Cynthia Greer had done, that the jewel seemed alive. She could almost sense a living fire that crept into her own dragging pulse. With a slight shiver, she laid it on the bed beside her.

"Now I will tell you its story, as far as I know it," she said.

She went on to tell Ada how she had found the opal in a muddy ditch when her horse had thrown her; how she had brought it home, fascinated by its beauty; how Philip Kendall had come that very afternoon and asked her to marry him; how her honeymoon had been a mixture of rapture and unhappiness; how Sydney Stokes, with his sinister story, had convinced her that Philip had married her for her money; and how, eventually, the opal had been lost when a mysterious assailant had shot Stokes.

Ada listened, wide-eyed and open mouthed. When Norma had finished, she cried:

"Then the opal really belongs to you. Here, you shall take it."

But Norma motioned it away with something like a shudder.

"No, no, I don't want it. Once I thought it would be my talisman, but now I know it has brought me nothing but bad luck."

"But don't you see that I can't keep it after this?" argued Ada. "It's really your property."

WOMEN WHO NEVER LIVED

Some of the world's most famous women never existed except between covers on books. For instance, Mrs. Malaprop, who was always saying things in the wrong way. When she was outlining her ideas of a young girl's education, she said: "I would never let her meddle with Greek, or Hebrew, or Algebra, or Simony, or Fluxions or Paradoxes—or handle any mathematical, astronomical, or diabolical instruments."

"She should have a supercilious knowledge of accounts, and as she grew up I would have her instructed in geometry, that she might know something of contagious countries." The famous character appears in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's comedy, "The Rivals," which was first played at Covent Garden Theatre in 1775.

Another woman who is famous, although she never existed, is Mrs. Grundy. She is the pattern of propriety. In Tom Morton's play, "Speed the Plough," one of the characters is jealous of her neighbor Mrs. Grundy, and her husband exclaims impatiently: "Be quiet, woolly? Always ding, ding, ding, Dame Grundy into my ears? What will Mrs. Grundy think?"

It was in that slight reference that the immortal Mrs. Grundy had her origin.

"One of the most engaging characters in Dickens' novel is Dolly Varden, who, in the seventies of last century, gave her name to bonnets and frocks."
