WHEN THE FLIERS GOT A NEW IDEA

Foster was a great town for twins. There were the Jones babies, the McLean girls and the Davis boys; but by far the most interesting ones were the mixed sets, Betty and Bobby Morris, and Johnny and Jeannie Keene. As Sally Tod said, you could almost always tell what a second twin was going to say after the first one got started if they were both boys or both girls; but you never could tell if they were mixed. That certainly was true about Johnny and Jennie Keene, for they each had their own ideas, and though they were good pals, they could keep secrets from each other, too, when it was necessary.

It seemed lucky that they could keep secrets when the Junior League started its contest in the fall, because all the boys of the League were on one side, calling themselves "The Fliers," and all the girls were on the other. They chose the name "Helping Hands," but they almost wished afterwards that they hadn't, because Johnny Keene, the boy's leader, called them the "Helpless Hands." Jeannie just laughed and set to work as the leader of the girls' side to think of ever so many fine things for the Helping Hands to do that would count on their score.

Johnny knew that look in her bright eyes, and he secretly told his side that they'd have to sit up nights, he guessed, to get ahead of Jeannie. But they'd beat the girls, of course they would.

First the Fliers, with money earned by husking corn for Farmer Little, bought a handsome little table for the public platform to hold vases of flowers. And immediately the Helping Hands, with money they earned by selling fresh-popped corn, supplied a lovely Japanese basket to go on the table instead of the homely old vase.

And when the Helping Hands thought of helping Mrs. Linsey make extra comforters because she had lately had three little orphan nephews come to live with her, the Fliers weren't far behind in providing the little new boys with a big, strong sled that they themselves had made and painted and that would hold all the little Linseys at one time.

Oddly enough, it was that sled which caued the unfortunate accident that gave two sides of the Junio League contest a new chance to do kind deeds, and just at a time, too, when there didn't seem another thing they could do in a little town like Foster. Ten-year-old Bobby and Betty Morris, whose widowed mother worked in the post office, had a big new bob from Uncle Jim, and they had some friends out coasting one Saturday afternoon. It happened that the three little Linsey boys on their one big sled got right in the path of the bob, and Bobby Morris turned so quickly to avoid hurting them that there was a spill. There was a good deal of laughing and shouting at first as the children picked themelves out of the soft, snow, but everyone felt very bad when it was discovered that Bobby and Betty had been thrown against a tree and broken their twin legs.

Yes, Betty had a broken leg and Bobby had one, too, and that was pretty hard with Mother Morris away most of the day working, and little Eunice and Billy, only five and seven years, old, the only helpers. But the Junior League came to the rescue so quickly, both sides, that it was difficult to say which happened first, the boys undertaking all the chores of wood and coal and doing errands, or the girls planning regular shifts to wait on the invalids, and help get supper started nights for Mrs. Morris, and dishes washed and floors swept.

Every day or two the boys would bring some surprise to make the time pass for Bobby—a bit of wood to carve, an Indian story to read, o ra puzzle to solve. It looked like the Fliers deserved so many contest points that they'd surely win. Bobby stoutly declared that they had won already, and that they were the most wonderful friends in the whole world.

But from the next room Betty would answer, "The Fliers are all right, but they can't be as kind as the Helping Hands. Yesterday they brought me sky-blue yarn to knit a dolly sweater, and last week they sent me "Pollyanna" to read, and they're always writing me the nicest funny notes and sending them through the post-office."

"Under our hats, boys, I'll have to admit that the Helpless Hands have kept us humping," Johnny said when his side was meeting in his basement carpenter shop one day. "And we'll have to do something big soon to get ahead of them. I think we ought to decide to spend some of that money we earned at our entertainment giving Bobby a Christmas present he'll never forget."

"Why, I know what it ought to be," said Tom Hill; "something that'd be the best company in the world. My aunt in the city had one, and it was as smart as—"He began to whisper, as if the girls could actually hear through the thick walls and the half a mile of streets to Milly's house, where they were meeting.

Meanwhile the Helping Hands were talking of Betty. "Her leg is worse than Bobby's," Sally Todd announced. "I heard the doctor say it was a compound fracture, and Betty probably would be laid up several weeks longer than Bob. It'll be just like a boy to go skooting off and leave her all alone without even a soul to talk to."

"Oh, that'll be worse than it is now," mourned sympathetic Ruthie Raymer, who just loved to talk all the time. "Now they can call back and forth, because their bedroom doors are right close to each other, and play guessing games."

The girls started to laugh at Ruthie, but they stopped when they saw a new idea shining in Jeannie's eye and heard her say softly, "Something to talk to—"

"What is it, Jeannie?" begged Sally.

"Oh, I know what we'll give Betty for Christmas," whispered Jeannie, and all the girls bent close to hear the great secret.

"It's lucky we've got the money we earned by darning stockings for the Orphans' Home in the city, or we'd never have enough," Jeannie said. "It seemed like an awful job when we did it, and they paid so little for each pair, but it's going to be worth our sticking at for a year when we see how happy Betty'll be and how surprised the Fliers will look when we win the contest. The stocking money is all girl money; I'm so glad the boys didn't have any part in it, because we've got a right to use it for the Helping Hands now. We'll order it right away—and teach it new things ourselves."

"Where'll we keep it until Christmas?" worried Ruthie.

"Up at my house," offered Sally. "It's lucky I haven't any brothers, and our house is so far up on the hill nobody'll hear it if it does—"

"We must tell the man at the depot to 'phone us the minute it comes."

So it happened that a week later Jeannie and Sally were haunting the depot, asking for their package. Once their hearts fluttered, for the boy helper said at once, "Sure it's here. Almost squealed its head off when it first came in." But he came back from the inner room with empty hands and declared stubbornly that there wasn't anything there addressed to any girl.

"It's not our Molly, after all," sighed Jean: "but what could it have been?" But on the next train the package arrived, and after that the Helping Hands almost lived at Sally's house. Perhaps that was one reason that Jean was seeing so little of her twin. He never seemed to be home even when she was, but was always running to Ted's.

Christmas Eve came. The rest of the girls stayed at Milly's, next door, while Jeannie tiptoed into the Morris house with a strange package and up the stairs to Betty's quiet, dark room. The twins had promised their mother to rest quietly until she should bring their suppers, so that they might later enjoy the little trees by their bedsides. Jeannie had made sure of this beforehand, and Mother Morris had laughed and suggested that she step back into the sewing room and listen to Betty's delight.

So with trembling haste, after she had groped for the right door, Jeannie went down the hall and sank into a rocker in the sewing room. What if the package should speak too soon, before Mother Morris lighted the tree at Betty's side. It was dark as pitch in the sewing room, but suddenly Jeannie seemed to hear breathing near her. Someone stumbled against her knee and exclaimed, "Plague it!" She breathed easier; it was only her twin; but what was he doing here? Mother Morris switched on the hall light and was bringing up the suppers.

Then from across the hall came an odd voice. "Hello, Bob!"

"Oh! Oh!" said Betty; "but I'm not Bob."

..ext door another cracked voice piped up, "How do, Betty. I'm Molly."

"Why, what is it?" cried Bob, straining his eyes to see.

It's a parrot in my room," laughed Betty.

"There's another in my room," said Bob.

"Two," gasped Jeannie. "I only bought one for Betty."

"The Fliers sent one to Bob," exclaimed Johnny; "and I bet you I got mine in the wrong room."

"We never thought you'd think of parrots!" Jeannie giggled.

"We never thought you would," said Johnny; "I take off my hat to the Helpless Hands. They're some givers!"

Then they went in to see Betty and Bobby, too excited to eat at having the wonderful chattering birds for their own.

And when the girls heard they said, "It almost seems like the boys ought to win. Boys hardly ever think of such nice things for presents."—The Junior Herald.

In Memoriam

MRS. ARTEMAS CLOW.

The death occurred very suddenly in the city Wednesday morning March 24 of Mrs. Artemas Clow of North Wiltshore. She had been in the city visiting her daughter Mrs. Harold McLean. Mrs. McLean on going upstairs found her mother lying on the floor. Medical assistance was at once called but the doctor on arriving found life's tide had ebbed away. A sad feature was that the night before her death while visiting at the home of Cleaver McLean she asked him to sing "Alone" after returning home she was much impressed with the words of the song, which was afterwards sung by Cleaver McLean at the funeral. The late Mrs. Clow was a kind and Christian woman ever ready to give a helping hand in her community. She was a zealous worker in the missionary society of the Methodist Church, and leaves to cherish her memory, Elmer at home, Mrs. Benjamin Woodroufe, Humboldt, Minn; now lying very ill in the hospital, Mrs. Harold McLean, city, and a sorrowing husband. The funeral was held Friday and was one of the largest seen in North Wiltshire for a long time the floral tributes were beautiful including a crescent from the family, wreath from the Missionary Society, Crescent, Mr. and Mrs. Cleaver McLean. Crescent, Mrs. John McLean. Wreath, Harold McLean. The services at the house and grave were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Webster, of the Methodist Church.—(Other papers please copy.)

HONEY INSTEAD OF SUGAR.

Physicians recommend honey as a substitute for cane sugar. Cane sugar is difficult to digest and makes a heavy tax upon the liver and other organs. Honey is a predigested food and is, therefore, more easily assimilated by the liver. In all cases of diabetes honey should be used instead of sugar.

Honey is especially valuable for children.

It is claimed that honey made from autumn flowers has medicinal properties not found in that procured early in the season. For this reason some prefer the amber colored or dark honey made in the fall.

ENFORCING THE PEACE TREATY

(Naval and Military Record London)

H. M. S. Malaya steamed out of Portsmouth Harbour on January 15, bound for Germany, and bearing the Inter-Allied Commission of Control on its mission to see that the naval terms of the Peace Treaty were being carried out by our late enemies. It was an historic event to see the flags of three admirals floating at the main—the British flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Edward F. B. Charlton, K. C. M. G., C. B., R. N., the French flag of Contre Admiral Dumesil, and the Italian flag of Rear-Admiral Orsini. As the ship passed the harbour entrance making for the open Channel the Victory fired a salute to the foreign flags, which was answered by the saluting battery of the Malaya. The capital ship was accompanied by the Turquoise, a British destroyer, and the Oise, a French despatch vessel, and these took up stations astern of the flagship. After a passage retarded somewhat by fog the squadron arrived off the Aussen Jade Light vessel, where a German pilot was embarked to take the ships up to Wilhelmshaven. Here, for the first time since 1914, the German Naval Ensign was hoisted on a British ship and given the national salute of 21 guns, the batteries of the German fortifications booming a dull reply.

On Monday, January 19, the Commission landed to inspect the Naval Dockyard and the work of disarmament, their departure from the quarter-deck forming a typical service spectacle of discipline and smartness. The inspection completed and conferences with the German delegation ended, the ships sailed on Wednesday, January 21, for Heligoland. The island loomed up from the North Sea mists about 10.30 a. m. and called forth much interest from the officers and men. Would that we could have steamed up to it so comfortably two years previously. Again the Commission landed to inspect the fortifications and harbour works. Leave was also granted to officers. Landing from the picket-boats the party was escorted beyond the precincts of the seaplane base by German naval pickets. Outside the gates and up on the Oberland the population had gathered to view the ships and the landing party. The children had been given a holiday from school in honour of the occasion, and they flocked around the groups of two and three officers as they separated to explore the island. Every where were signs of destruction and disarmament—the Germans are evidently carrying out the terms of the Treaty in this mass of fortifications.

The population look well fed and well clothed. The day after the out-break of war all were given but a few hours' notice to leave and were deported to camps in Germany. They were allowed to take no baggage or belongings, and everything had to be left open to the armed forces which were poured in to man the defences The Frisian section of the people were very hearty in their welcome and showed open pleasure at the presence of the British. The Germans exhibited a sullen indifference to the visit. When asked if they could speak English the children answered, "We learn English in school, but we are not allowed to speak it." It would seem probable that were a plebiscite taken the island would once more pass into British hands, judging from the conversation of the people. Climbing up the 186 steps to the heights above the Unterland, one wandered round the high cliffs conscious of a broken power in the scenes of destruction all round. The shops were raided for curios, which were extraordinarily cheap on account of the value of the mark. A small part of the harbour seems to be used by the fishing fleet, and this section the inhabitants are desirous of retaining when all the other works are destroyed.

On Thursday the litle squadron sailed for Brunsbuttel, the North Sea entrance to the Kiel Canal. Dredging operations have apparently been neglected since the armistice, and the Commission had therefore to be transferred to a cruiser for the passage of the Canal, the draught of the Malaya being too great to make the trip through. The Elbe is remarkable for its lowlying banks, dotted here and there with windmill's and groups of trees, resembling in many ways the Fen district of England. The evening's are memorable for the remarkable sunsets, rarely seen in England. The weather during the stay was bright and crisp and rather cold, but mild for a German winter. Brunsbuttel is a small town, owing its existence to the great locks which form the Canal entrance. Here the reception of the British officers was much less hospitable than at Heligoland. The inhabitants could not resist a continual stare, and seemed to take our presence as a necessary evil. The shopkeepers were only too eager to dispose of curios, and needed careful watching to prevent the charge of exorbitant prices. In one jeweller's shop the frau of the household had been in London for 15 years prior to the war, and expresses a wish to return there as soon as possible. She styles the British as "not so bad," but our gallant Allies the French she seems to object to.

The spirit of "Deutschland uber Allies' does not seem yet dead, but "Deutschland unter Allies" preferable to "Der Krieg."

ROYAL TRANSPORT AT FALKLAND ISLANDS

Much interest attaches to the steamer Royal Transport, now in Halifax, from the fact that she was at the Falkland Islands at the time of Admiral Sturdee's great victory. She arrived at Port Stanley, the capital of the Falkland Islands, at the time the news of the disaster at Coronnel was received. The inhabitants were in a state of great concern as the arrival of the German fleet and the capture of the islands was to be expected at any time. They were bravely preparing for its reception, however, and every person capable of bearing arms was drilling while the women and children were camped inland as far away from danger as possible. The governor of the islands immediately ordered the Royal Transport to leave the islands in order to avoid capture. She sailed for Montevideo and from there proceeded to Abrolhos Islands where Admiral Sturdee's fleet was assembling. She accompanied the fleet to Port Stanley and was along side the Infexible coaling her until the battleships sailed for the fight at 9.30 a. m.

ROYAL BANK PURCHASES A MONTREAL BLOCK

MONTREAL, March 25.—A large bank and general office building will be constructed by the Royal Bank of Canada on the site bounded by St. James, St. Peter and Notre Dame Streets and D'Allard lane, the existing property has already been purchased by the bank. Present tenants on the property will not be disturbed before May 1, 1921. hrdludlu 1, 1921, it is stated by officials of the bank.

The purchase marks one of the biggest real estate deals which has been transacted in the city for a long time past, and was rendered necessary by the expansion of the bank's business rendering the present quarters on the opposite side of St. James street inadequate to meet present and future demands.

Lloyd George Invites Miners To Conference.

LONDON, March 25.—The Prime Minister Lloyd George today invited the Miners Federation to call a new meeting in an attempt to reach a possible settlement of their demands for wage increase The Prime Minister's action followed the announcement of the miners vote yesterday rejecting the government's compromise offer The government offered an increase of a shilling and six pence daily, but the miners held to their demand for a three shilling increase.

LONDON, March 25.—The new German cabinet was completed last midnight, according to a Berlin despatch to the Amsterdam Telegraff.

Heavy Meat Eaters Have Slow Kidneys

EAT LESS MEAT IF YOU FEEL BACKACHY OR HAVE BLADDER TROUBLE

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

WHITE CHILD TAKEN FROM SOME SQUAWS.

MONCTON, N. B., March 27.—A white child giving the name of Mary Doyle, and hailing from near Bartibog, Northumberland County, has been taken from some squaws living in the eastern end of the city and placed in the Childrens' Aid Home. The attention of the police was called to the child by a citizen who stated that the squaws were ill-treating the girl who is about ten years of age. The police have been unable to find out how the child came to be in the possession of the Indians, but the suspicion is that she was traded to the Indians for baskets. The little girl seems unable to give the officers much information to work upon and the squaws are reticent on the subject.

MR. NOBODY.

I know a funny little man,
As quiet as a mouse,
Who does the mischief that is done
In everybody's house.
There's no one ever sees his face,
And yet we all agree
That every plate we break was cracked
By Mr. Nobody.

'Tis he who always tears our books
Who leaves the door ajar;
He pulls the buttons from our shirts
And scatters pins afar.
That squeaking door will always squeak,
For, prithee, don't you see?
We leave the oiling to be done
By Mr. Nobody.

The finger marks upon the doors
By none of us are made;
We never leave the blinds unclosed
To let the curtains fade.
The ink we never, spill; the boots
That lying 'round you see
We not our boots. They all belong
To Mr. Nobody.—Ex.

INFLUENZA BREAKS YOUR VITALITY

It Leaves in its Wake Poor Blood, a run-down Nervous Condition

No Strength, No Ambition, No Energy

Vinol is Guaranteed to Make Rich, Red Blood, and Build You Up

If you are just recovering from influenza or any severe sickness, you need VINOL to restore your old time strength, energy and vitality, because the bad effects of poor devitalized blood cannot be over-estimated, and it is the beef and cod liver peptones, iron and manganese peptonates, and glycero-phosphates contained in VINOL that makes red corpuscles, enriches the blood, improves that sluggish circulation. In this natural manner VINOL creates a hearty appetite and soon every muscle and organ in the body is energized and re-vitalized, and you are once more restored to that vigorous, full-blooded health which is the birthright of every man and woman.

Mrs. Albert Boutilier of Halifax, N.S., says: "The influenza left me all run-down and so weak I could not work. Nothing seemed to help me until my daughter bought me a bottle of Vinol, and it accomplished wonders for me, as it built me up and restored my strength quickly. I cannot praise it enough."

VINOL is the one Remedy that is guaranteed to help you. Your druggist knows it, so do not accept substitutes. He will return your money if it fails to help you.
