"Generally the only phase of married life that disagrees with the wife is the husband."

"Do you think it was an apple that the devil gave Eve that caused the trouble?" "No; I think he handed her a dragon."

"Do you know how to make a chicken tender, George?" "Sure—flowers, chocolates, and well chosen words of love will do the trick."

"How did you succeed in keeping that fellow who was so madly in love with you at a distance?" "Married him—and now he's usually as far away as his club."

TRAPPED

The first half of the distance to the beach he took easily. But from then on, urged partly by his desire to see Katherine and partly by an unreasoning fear that took possession of him, he ran doggedly, careless of the noise his footsteps made in the forest. He was breathless and panting when he arrived at the trysting place. A single dark figure detached itself from the trees that grew near the water and came silently into his arms.

"Katherine!" "Bill!" She rested against him, alarmed at the heavy beating of his heart. "You are all right?" she whispered. "Yes," his words came in jerks. "All right—and you, my darling?" "Perfectly well, Bill. But talk softly and quickly. I have been waiting for an hour. I am afraid my absence will be discovered. I came as soon as the others slept."

Bill dropped to the sand and pulled her down beside him. "Will you marry me, Katherine, as soon as this tabu is over?" She laughed softly. "Of course, I will. But how will you manage it? And why do you ask so fiercely?" "I told Aruman, the chief, that we would be married by the native ceremony when the other men and girls are married in a few days. Was I right to tell him that, Kitty, dearest?"

She did not answer at once. He stroked her hair and kissed her throat. Then she kissed him on the mouth and said steadily, "You were right, Bill. I hadn't thought of that, but it seems right to me. Their ways may not be our ways, but we are here now and we may have to stay a long time. Yes, I think you are right." "That isn't all, Kitty. If we are to be married by the tribal ceremony, we must be members of the tribe. I was made a blood brother of Ahwaya tonight—that was what delayed me. And you must become a blood sister of one of the women before we can go through the marriage ceremony with the others."

"What does that mean?" "Rapidly he sketched the ceremony for her. "I don't know, of course, just what they will do to you, but it won't be any worse than what I went through. I'm one of Aruman's subjects now and you will be, too, before the time of tabu is up if you are willing to go through with it." "Of course I am," she said readily. "You are sure this is the right thing for us to do?" he asked again. "I can't see any other way dear. We may be here for years from all I can understand. We might as well have those years together. And I seem to remember that whenever a man and woman take each other for man and wife in the presence of witnesses it is a binding marriage whether they have a license or not. "That's common-law marriage," he told her.

"Whatever it is, my dear, it seems to me that if we take each other for better or worse, live faithfully and lovingly together, it is right in the sight of God. There, is that what you wanted me to say?"

"It is just what I wanted you to say. Listen, do you know where we are to send our honeymoon? In the palace of the King? Old Aruman is giving us his best back room until they can build a house for us. How's that for being ritzy?"

Katherine laughed. "He's an old darling. I'll have father load him down with gold or jewels or whatever his heart desires when we are rescued."

"Still sure that we'll be rescued?" "Very sure—but you must go and I must go back to my house. Why are you sleeping away from the camp tonight?"

He told her and added, "I suppose we must part, but I wish we didn't have to. I gather that the last days of this tabu affair are pretty hectic. They've got a couple of brown boys up on top of the hill watching for rain clouds. And if they knew we were here together they'd probably think we were helping old Paloola to push the clouds away in another direction."

They recognized the wisdom of an immediate parting, but after the

"Follow Thru"

Charming Irene Delroy (above) is one of the reasons for the brilliant success of this jolly show. Critics call it a "fast-stepping dance marathon"—you can imagine what hard wear that means for the sheer stockings. Thanks to Lux they now last twice as long!

They all use Lux—

Fioretta • Follow Thru • Hello Daddy • Hold Everything • Lady Fingers • Music in May • The New Moon • Paris

Every Great Movie Studio uses Lux to double the life of beautiful screen clothes—from fragile chiffons like Ruth Taylor's charming frock (above) to smart, sturdy sportsgowns. It's economy to use Lux, the movies say.

Every Musical Show

Lux doubles stocking wear!

Stocking bills cut in half with safe Lux cleansing! Every musical show gets the same results . . . So can you—

STOCKING bills mounting higher and higher . . . producers of New York's musical shows set out to reduce them—

"Try many different cleansing methods, different soaps," wardrobe mistresses were told. And they did . . . with amazing results.

For the musical shows all—without a single exception—found that "Stockings washed always in Lux give more than double the usual wear . . . give us twice as many performances."

Now every musical show in New York uses Lux—to double the life of stockings! And if these sheer stockings, danced in night after night, stay like new so much longer when cleaned always with Lux, so will yours!

Follow this tested experience with your own stockings . . . and remember, too, that other famous authorities—the movies, department store buyers in 132 great stores—Fifth Avenue dressmakers also find that "Lux doubles the life of fine fabrics."

"Whoopee"

Ziegfeld success featuring lovely Ruth Eting (above) also reduced stocking bills with Lux. Mr. Ziegfeld specifies Lux for stockings in all his shows. Another producer (Shubert's general manager) says enthusiastically—"We would use Lux even if it cost $1.00 a box—Lux cuts stocking bills in half."

They, too, use Lux—

Pleasure Bound • Show Boat • The Red Robe • Spring is Here • Three Cheers • This Year of Grace • Whoopee

Such stockings as these stay like new twice as long with Lux in every one of New York's dazzling musical shows. As Katherine Reddy, wardrobe mistress of Ziegfeld productions, in which the graceful dancers above are featured, puts it: "I insist upon Lux because it never fades colors or harms delicate threads, and there's no rubbing to roughen or pull. No wonder Lux doubles stocking wear."

Famous Dressmakers Use Lux to keep mannequins' exquisite lingerie and stockings just like new (see picture above) . . . And department buyers—92% of those interviewed in 132 big stores—also insist on Lux!

fashion of lovers they clung to each other, exchanged a dozen last kisses, promised each other a paradise of happiness when they might be openly together in a few days. An at last reluctantly did part. Bill had taken only a few steps when he crouched back behind a tree. Quite plainly he could see the figure of a man, peering toward the beach. Satisfied that he saw no one, the guard turned toward the camp and collared with Katherine. She screamed and Bill lost his head. With one bound he was upon the man, while Katherine whispered fiercely to him, "Run, run, he hasn't seen you yet. Run. He will think I am here alone." But in that brief space, the guard had raised his voice, screamed to his feet, and struck Bill a stunning blow with a club he carried. The other man who had been left to watch the women's camp came running. He overpowered Katherine an threw a rope of native hemp around Bill's arms. Then he sent the first guard on a run to the men's camp, tied Katherine firmly to a tree, made sure that Bill was well secured and set himself to wait for help. Hours passed. Bill returned to consciousness to find himself lying on the ground, arms twisted helplessly beneath him. "Katherine," he called sharply. Instantly a huge hand was placed over his mouth and another blow delivered on his head. Bill lost consciousness again, but not before he heard Katherine's answer. "Yes, Bill, I'm here. All right. Don't talk."

The cold tropical dawn was breaking over the sea when Aruman arrived, aghast at what had happened. Ahwaya's miserable face looked at the prostrate man. Other faces, some full of fear, peered at Bill where he lay on the ground. All eyes were averted from Katherine, for they believed her to be cursed. "Go, white woman," Aruman thundered after ordering her freed from the tree against which she was standing. "No," she defied him. "I stay here. With my man," and she knelt at Bill's side and took his bruised head in her arms. "Go," the chief repeated. "Go or it will be bad for your man. Bad for you. Bad for my people. Go." Katherine knew now that Bill was alive, his warm face and steady breathing told her that. She realized that she might only make matters worse by attempting to stay, so she got to her feet and said with dignity "I go, Chief Aruman. But you must tell me the fate of this white man who belongs to me." "I will tell you, white woman. Go now. I will come for you later." Still he did not look at her and it seemed to Katherine that there was more of sadness than anger in his voice. "On the word of a chief you will tell me the fate of the white man?" "On the word of a chief I will tell you when the times comes." And with that Katherine had to be content. When she reached camp she found the women stirring. Apparently they knew what had happened and avoided her eyes and made a gesture of fear as she passed. She found the entrance of her house
