This is an age for record beating in all lines. It is doubtful if any living Islander will remember having seen acres of oats to be cut in November, and stooked oats ripening and drying in the fields, as at present seen in some sections of the Province. Should any one remember a similar experience The Guardian would be glad to hear from them.

A subscriber who took part in the first of The Guardian's Limerick Competition writes: "Having been so successful last week in the Limerick pool, I venture again to "cast a line.' You are to be congratulated on your effort to afford pastime and entertainment to the many readers of your always interesting newspaper. I think, that at least, during the long winter evenings, it will increase in popularity and interest. I was going to suggest that you name a subject, and allow competition for the whole five lines, choosing the best for the next week's "Limerick." But perish the thought! You have evidently some one around your sanctum who is "facile princeps" in the art. I received my cheque tonight. Thanks. I'll soon be rich. Nearly two dollars a line. Not all of the other great poets receive as much.'

The people of St. Charles and vicinity were shocked to hear of the sudden and unexpected death of John Gorman which sad event occurred at his home Oct. 26. Although he had almost reached the four-score mark he was still active, and enjoying full use of his mental facilities. He was a man of a kind, cheerful, and pleasing disposition, and by his genial hospitality gained for himself a host of friends, and was a general favorite. Having lived in St. Charles from his childhood he was able to recall many interesting stories of pioneer life, of days when the commonest luxuries of the present were unknown and when the blazed trail was almost the only thoroughfare. He was a man of a strong and robust constitution, and overcame the difficulties of pioneer life, and accomplished much that to the average individual seemed practically impossible. He was the father of nine children, all of whom with his loving wife survive him.
