A GREAT CHANCE For a Quick Buyer $700

A Ford motor car has to be disposed of at once as circumstances make it of no further use to the owner. This car is really and actually as good if not better than a car right out of the factory as it has been tested and found to be one of the best Fords produced. It has a perfect running motor and has the appearance of, what it practically is, a brand new car. The car has absolutely no defects and has only been run about 200 miles with a very careful driver.

This offer will not last long so apply quickly.

Auction Sale of Valuable Property, Charlottetown

Being instructed by the owner I will sell at public auction on Thursday, June 12, 1919, commencing at 12 o'clock noon, that valuable three tenement house situated on Longworth Ave., opposite the property of Mr. H. Aitken. This property, Nos. 26, 30 and 34 is beautifully situated in one of the most pleasant parts of the city being the residential section of the town and is never known to be untenanted having all modern fixtures and sewerage connections, a firm foundation of stone and brick, splendid cellar and the whole building is in first class repairs. There is also a choice building lot in the rear fronting on Cumberland St. This is a rare opportunity to purchase such an up-to-date property for so little money, and half the purchase money may remain on property if so desired.

Sale positive.

BAB DISCHARGES THE SERVANTS AND TELLS ROBERT

CHAPTER CXII

Before they left I spoke of giving up all we had to help, every single thing.

"Unless we do we cannot let you do so much for us," I said when Frederick objected to my plans. "Put an advertisement in the paper for the house, rent or sell, please. I have an inventory made for everything in it, and could give possession immediately."

"That's the spirit," he looked his admiration. Then: "By Jove! I wonder if Tearle wouldn't take it. I heard he was going to buy a house in New York. In fact that he was looking for one."

"That would be wonderful! but perhaps he would want it to go as part payment of what we owe," Nell suggested. "We can't do that if the small fry are to be paid off."

"We'll make a price for cash. If he doesn't take it someone else will. It is a lovely home. I am sorry Mrs. Forbes you feel it must be given up. But I guess there is no other way. You couldn't live here anyway. It wouldn't do now."

No, I could see plainly it wouldn't do for us to attract any attention, or to indulge in the slightest extravagance. And in truth I had no wish to. I felt crushed, as if all that I had thought worth living for had escaped me forever. This feeling would pass away of course. It was wrong to give it entrance. I had Robert and I also still had Nell. It was all very hard, very dreadful, but I comforted myself as best I could by thinking that it wasn't so bad that it might not have been worse. Suppose that added to this terrible business trouble, I also had lost him to Blanche Orton or some other woman. That I felt I could not have borne.

"I can't imagine what we should have done without you," I said trying to smile through my tears as Mr. Frederick begged me not to worry, that he would keep me in touch with what they did.

Then he said: "But we can do nothing if all these people think they can get at Forbes here. I do not intend one of them shall be cheated, or go without a fair interest. But you must remember what they receive will be very little compared to what they have been led to expect. But if they realize that it is that or nothing they will be only too glad to get their money back and more interest than the banks pay."

I tried to be brave, and kissed Nell good bye quite calmly. But when they had gone and I was sure I would not cause him worry by my tears I gave way to the nervous tension I was under and cried for an hour. Really I felt better afterwards.

And at once began to make plans for leaving. I told all the servants they were discharged. I would keep one to help me pack, the others I let go at once giving them a week's pay in lieu of notice. It was cheaper than to keep and feed them another week.

The cook and I worked all day packing up what I should need for Nell, Robert and myself. The house was spick and span, ready to show to anyone. I was a good housekeeper, my one accomplishment aside from my music. By night I was ready to leave. But now I must wait until the house was disposed of in some way. It would rent or sell better with someone in it. And it was just as cheap to stay there as anywhere if I did without servants.

One thing hurt. The very next day Robert's quarter was up at the select private school he had been attending. I wrote the teacher he would be a pupil no longer, then made arrangements for him to attend public school. I was surprised when I told him.

"Whop, la!" he exclaimed. "I'm glad to go where so many boys go. I've always wanted to go to public school. Mother, so don't look as if you were punishing me." I had told him nothing of our changed fortunes. But he was a manly little chap, so I set down and told him his father had lost his money, that we would have to be very careful, live very differently. He looked serious, then said:

"I'm sorry for you and dad, but I don't care a bit for myself. Lincoln didn't have any money, couldn't even go to public school. But he got to be President of the United States you know." Like many boys Lincoln was his idol. He never tired of talking or reading of him, and had treasured everything he could get together which reminded him of the martyred President. A large picture hung over his bed, and several smaller ones adorned the walls of his room.

I hugged my boy close, and breathed a little prayer of thankfulness that he was so unspoiled.

There are five simple ways to tell good tea.

- First, by the bright copper color of the tea when steeped.
- Second, by the exquisite aroma.
- Third, by the delightful, refreshing flavor.
- Fourth, by the satisfying richness.
- Fifth, by the economical strength.

Make a brewing and you will find all these qualities combined in Red Rose.
