Chamberlain's COLIC, CHOLERA AND Diarrhoea Remedy

A few doses of this remedy will invariably cure an ordinary attack of diarrhoea.

It has been used in nine epidemics of dysentery with perfect success.

It can always be depended upon, even in the most severe attacks of cramp colic and cholera morbus.

It is equally successful for summer diarrhoea and cholera infantum in children, and is the means of saving the lives of many children each year.

When reduced with water and sweetened it is pleasant to take.

Every man of a family should keep this remedy in his home. Buy it now. It may save life.

"Never see such a beauty! Beats the world," said Uncle Eb in a whisper, whereat both David and Elisabeth shook their heads.

"Lord o' mercy! Don't let her know it," Elisabeth answered in a low tone. "She's beginning to have."

"Just then Hope came by us leading her pet filly that had been born within the month. Immediately Mrs. Brower changed the subject.

"To have what?" David inquired as soon as the girl was out of hearing.

"Suspensions," said Elisabeth mournfully. "Spends a good deal of her time at the looking glass. I think the other girls tell her, and then that young Livingston has been turning her head."

"Turning her head?" he exclaimed.

"Turning her head," she answered. "He sat here the other day and deliberately told her that he had never seen such a complexion and such lovely hair."

Elisabeth Brower mocked his accent with a show of contempt that feebly echoed my own emotions.

"That's the way o' city folks, mother," said David.

"It's a bad way," she answered. "I do not think he ought to come here. Hope's a child yet, and we mustn't let her get notions."

"I'll tell him not t' come any more," said David as he and Uncle Eb rose to go to their work.

"I'm afraid she ought not to go away to school for a year yet," said Elisabeth, a troubled look in her face.

"Pshaw, mother! Ye can't keep her under yer wing allwus," said he.

"Well, David, you know she is very young and uncommonly"—She hesitated.

"Handsome," said he. "We might as well own up if she is our child."

"If she goes away," continued Elisabeth, "some of us ought t' go wither."

Then Uncle Eb and David went to their work in the fields and I to my own task. That very evening they began to talk of sending the farm and going to a stint of cording wood that day and finished it before 2 o'clock. Then I got my pole of mountain ash, made hook and line ready, dug some worms and went fishing. I cared not so much for the fishing as for the solitude of the woods. I had a bit of thinking to do. In the thick timber there was a place where Tinkie brook began to hurry and break into murmurs on a pebble bar as if its feet were tickled. A few more steps and it burst into a peal of laughter that lasted half the year as it tumbled over narrow shelves of rock into a foamy pool. Many a day I had sat fishing four hours at the little fall under a birch tree among the brakes and moss. No ray of sunlight ever got to the dark water below me—the hair of many a big fish that had yielded to the temptation of my bait. Here I lay in the cool shade while a singular sort of heart sickness came over me. A wild partridge was beating his gong in the near woods all the afternoon. The sound of the water seemed to break in the tree tops and fall back upon me. I had lain there thinking an hour or more when I caught the far of approaching footsteps. Looking up, I saw Ted Peary coming through the bushes, pole in hand.

"Fishin'?" he asked.

"Only thinking," I answered.

"Couldn't be in better business," said he as he sat down beside me.

More than once he had been my

"Fishin'?" he asked.

"Nothing in this world if ye take the right road. Ye've grown t' be a great big strapping fellow, but ye're only—sixteen?"

"That's all," I said mournfully.

"Ye're as big a fool to go fallin' in love as I'd be. Ye're too young an' I'm too old. I say to you, wait. Ye've got to get t' college."

"College!" I exclaimed incredulously.

"Yes, an' that's another secret," said he. "I tol' David Brower what I thought o' your writing that essay on bugs in pertickler—an' I tol' 'im what people were sayin' o' your work in school."

"What d' he say?" I asked.

"Said Hope had tol' 'im all about it—that she was as proud o' you as she was o' her cur, an' I believe it. Well, says I, 'yer ougher sen' that boy t' college. 'Goin' to,' says he. 'He'll go t' the 'cademy this fall if he wants to. Then he can go t' college soon's he's ready.' Threw up my hat an' shouted, I was that glad."

As he spoke the old man's face kindled with enthusiasm. In me he had one who understood him, who saw truth in his thought, music in his verse, a noble simplicity in his soul. I took his hand in mine and thanked him heartily. Then we rose and came away together.

"Remember," he said as we parted at the corner, "there's a way laid out fer you. In God's time it will lead to every good thing you desire. Don't jump over the fence. Don't try t' pass any mileston 'fore ye've come to it. Don't mope. Keep yer head cool with philosophy, yer feet warm with travel an' don't worry 'bout yer heart. It won't turn t' stum if ye do keep it awhile. Allwus hev enough of it about ye t' do business with. Goodby!"

CHAPTER XI.

GERALD BROWER, who was a loby when I came to live at Faraway and was now eleven, had caught a cold in seed time, and he had never quite recovered. His coughing had begun to keep him awake, and one night it brought alarm to the whole household. Elisabeth Brower was up early in the morning and called Uncle Eb, who went away for the doctor as soon as light came. We ate our breakfast in silence. Father and mother and Grandma Bissette spoke only in low tones, and somehow the anxiety in their faces went to my heart. Uncle Eb returned about 8 o'clock and said the doctor was coming.

Old Dr. Bigsby was a very great man in that country. Other physicians called him far and wide for consultation. I had always regarded him with a kind of awe intensified by the aroma of his drugs and the gleam of his lancet. Once I had been his patient, and then I had trembled at his approach. When he took my little wrist in his big hand I remember with what reluctance I stuck out my quivering tongue, black as I feared, with evidences of prevarication.

He was a picture for a painter man as he came that morning erect in his gait. Who could forget the hoary majesty of his head—his "stovepipe" tilted back, his white locks flying about his ears? He had a long nose, a smooth shaved face and a left eye that was a trifle turned. His thoughts were generally one day behind the calendar. Today he seemed to be digesting the affairs of yesterday. He was, therefore, absentminded to a degree that made no end of gossip. If he came out one day with shoe strings flying, in his remorse the next he would forget his collar; if one told him a good joke to-day he might not seem to hear it, but tomorrow he would take it up in its turn and shake with laughter.

Considers Dr. Chase's Nerve Food a splendid health builder. It cured her of indigestion and headache.

Mrs. J. McLeod, Chestnut Street, Charlottetown, P. E. I., states:—"For some time I have been troubled with attacks of nervous sick headache which were accompanied by indigestion. I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food some time ago and have been greatly benefited by it. My digestion has been improved, the headaches have disappeared and I have gained in flesh and weight. I consider Dr. Chase's Nerve Food a splendid health builder."

It takes time to thoroughly cure dyspepsia and its accompanying symptoms, but you can be certain that each dose of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is of some benefit to you, and that the cure will be complete and lasting.

NURSERY WISDOM.

Day gets on her nightcap;
Of gray and grimy dusk;
Night slips on her black wrap,
And out flies soot, like musk.

Day goes into pieces,
As dusk flies off from all;
Night's cloak tears in creases,
And thro' them bright stars fall.

Day is badly worried
When she is told to break,
Night is sadly flurried,
When stars her side forsake.

Suns are best in daytime
And moons do well at night;
Stars may dance a ragtime,
When moons are out of sight.

God has set a pathway—
Now this is very true—
They walk on it each day
And—'cause—me—so—should—ye—
