Shall This Girl Marry a Man Eighteen Years Her Senior? — Why Girls Prefer the Society of Boys — Problem of the Tyrannical Mother

DEAR DOROTHY DIX—I am a young girl engaged to a man eighteen years older than myself. He wishes me to marry him immediately, but I am afraid that the difference in our ages is too great. I have a friend who married a wealthy man with about the same difference in their ages. He never takes her anywhere. He never wants any friends to come to the house. He had all his money before she married him, so he always refers to everything as his, although he is wealthy. He gives her only a small allowance. Are all old men like that?

TROUBLED.

Answer:
I think eighteen years difference in age between a man and woman is entirely too much unless the man happens to be of a very youthful temperament and the girl is very old and sedate in her ways. Then the two might come together on a platform of mutual tastes and habits, but the average man and woman would find that eighteen years made a gulf between them that even with their best endeavors they could not bridge.

There is, in reality, nothing else that makes such a bar between a husband and wife as disparity in age, because we are all the product of the age in which we have been reared. That is, our opinions, our point of view on things and our characters so that we can change them more than we can the shape of our noses, or the color of our eyes. Also, to each age belong certain experiences and interests that grip us at the time, but which we cannot repeat without utter boredom.

This is why people should always marry in their own age class. They should have the same tastes, the same ideas and ideals, the same opinions they should enjoy doing the same things, and they cannot do this if one is much older than the other.

Take the case you cite as an example of this. The husband is a middle-aged or elderly man. In his youth he had his fling. He enjoyed going to the theatres, to every sort of place of amusement. He liked crowds. He liked the bright lights. Little things amused and entertained him just because he was young and full of the high spirits of youth.

He is tired of all that now. He is too stiff and old to learn to dance the Black Bottom and the Charleston. The things that used to amuse him bore him stiff. He has to consider his stomach now, and so he would rather eat at home where he can maintain his diet than to dine at a restaurant. He is tired of being out and he wants to stay home instead of sunning around. All perfectly natural and inevitable. Just a part of growing old.

But the young girl he has married hasn't had her fling. She hasn't had her playtime, and she craves it with every fiber of her being. She wants to dance, to go to places of amusement, to do all the things that her husband has done and about which he is blasé.

He won't take her. He won't go himself and he won't let her go with him, and she sits at home through dull, dreary evenings watching the laughing young married couples she knows going out for a good time, and there is bitterness and rebellion in her heart.

This will most likely be your fate if you marry a man eighteen years older than yourself. Don't be misled by the lying old adage about it being better to be an old man's darling than a young man's slave. There are tyrants so merciless as that, and no slavery more complete than that of the young woman who is married to an old man.

Far better to marry a poor young man and work up with him than an old man who will make you squander your youth waiting on him and putting up with his whims. A young husband will, at least, have sympathy with you, but an old man will think you foolish and unreasonable to want the pleasures of youth, because they do not appeal to him.

DOROTHY DIX.

The American Merchant Marine

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3.—A shaft of optimism today was shot through the Shipping Board's picture of the operations of the American merchant marine during the year.

With the nation's shipping in a comparatively low state, the board manifested assurance in its annual report over the prospects for successful privately owned lines through the provisions of the Jones-White merchant marine act passed last spring.

The Board predicted that considerable new construction of merchant vessels would be gotten under way during the coming year as a result of the passage of the act increasing liberal terms for loans and means by which ship operators have obtained valuable mail carrying contracts.

"The new measure gives every reasonable indication of accomplishing the three main purposes for which it was enacted, namely, to assist in the development of the American merchant marine generally, to aid in increasing the foreign commerce of the United States, and to facilitate the transfer of the government's war-built fleet and established services to private ownership," the report said.
