Men Marooned

By George Marsh

THE STORY

"He can't," agreed Skene. "They'll never wait till then to cross the ice to Elkwan when they know we'll pay more for the fur right here, within easy reach. They always have a blow-out New Year's, and they'll come here to have it. We'll give 'em a good one. We can afford to."

"Right-o!" McDonald nodded, then added: "Your hunch on this Elkwan man seems to be borne out by his bucking the ice in that York boat. Only a man with guts would tackle that strait in a tub."

"There ain't no doubt about his color," said Skene with finality, exhaling a cloud of smoke. "He's due to give us a fight, as he wrote you—just how I don't see, but I've seen enough fightin' men in the last five years to know the look of 'em—He's one."

"He mus' scare you, my fren', leetle bit, wen you meet heem on de beach," bantered Breault.

The heavy brows of Skene lifted in a look, close to contempt, which he cast at the speaker. "Breault, I've been in places that would have turned that black hair of yours gray. Scare me? This Elkwan man was civil, and I was civil. I was after some shells. But don't forget the message he sent you. He said if that black Frenchman ever showed up at his place again, he'd get a knife stuck into him. And I'm betting he told the truth—from the ugly look of a half-breed he had with him. When the strait freezes why don't you go and find out?"

Breault laughed derisively. "I onlee kees de squaw."

"Yes," added McDonald. "Get this straight in your thick head. You keep away from the squaws this winter here. We're after fur—not women."

Angered, Breault sneered viciously. "You don't have to worry 'bout de women."

In scarlet patches blood smeared the maimed face of the man on the box. The deep blue of his eyes blackened—then flamed. Slowly, he straightened his long body until his russet head touched the deck above. A huge fist trembled in the bearded face of the man whose small eyes shifted in secret fear. "You drop another word like that to me, you slacker, and I'll hammer you into jelly."

Stiff in his seat, Skene stolidly puffed at his pipe, watching through the corners of half-closed eyes the groping right hand of the Frenchman.

The master of the Ghost, swallowed hard—choked. His eyes wavered—then fell before the flaming mask, grotesque, terrible in its fury, of the man who bent toward him. The moving hand of Breault stopped—limp. Slowly McDonald regained his seat, the sweat standing in beads on his wide, bronzed forehead. Refilling his pipe, he lighted it and, ignoring the rebuked Breault, turned to Skene.

"Where were we? Oh, yes! Now, when Joe start for the other end of the island? I'm curious to learn what that old Souci is up to."

"Now that he's got a dog-team, he intends to star—"

The voices of men on deck, evidently hailing some one on the ice, cut off Skene.

McDonald called, "what's the fuss about on deck?"

"Dog-team on the ice," came the reply.

The three men got into Eskimo parkas and went on deck. Halfway from the shore a dog-team was making its way over the lump ice of the cove.

"Who is it? Recognize him?" asked Skene of the east coast Cree interpreter, who was wintering on the Ghost. "It's not Joe?"

The Indian shook his head.

Presently the hooded driver of the approaching huskies called: "Kequay!" and shortly reached the rail of the schooner, watched by the curious knot of men on deck.

Making his dogs fast, the stranger clambered aboard, and with a grave "Kequay!" shook the hand of each of the group—then spoke in Cree to the interpreter.

"Who is he?" asked McDonald. "He's got a cut to his jib that's different from most of these Crees. Shrewd looking old party."

"He says he's Souci, Treaty Chief of the Elkwan Crees," replied the interpreter. "He cum to mak' talk with McDonald. Ha! Ha!"

Skene and McDonald exchanged surprised looks.

"What's this?" said the latter in an undertone. "Why, it's the bird Guthrie put ashore with Joe to work against us."

"Here's our chance to put one over on Mr. Hudson's Bay," chuckled Skene. "He must have a proposition to make, or he would have kept away from us. He's got nerve, I'll say. Joe told me he'd shoot him if he met him on the island."

Shortly the old Indian, the fur hood of his caribou capots pushed back from his shock of raven hair, sat in the warm cabin with McDonald and Skene. His story, told through the interpreter, for he said he spoke no English, was brief. Yes, as they had been told he was Treaty Chief of the Elkwan Crees, and had been sent by Guthrie to attempt to hold the trade until the strait closed. But the Hudson's Bay company had a cold heart. It always had given the hunters little for their fur, and now when others came to trade, and threatened to take the fur from the old company, its heart was still cold, and it offered less than the new traders. He, Souci, a chief, had been promised reward if he saved part of the trade and brought it to Elkwan; but what reward? It was the pay of a squaw. "His two sons already had three black fox pelts and eight silvers—worth double what the factor at Elkwan had promised for his winter's work. Now, he had great influence with the Cree hunters—was a shaman, and many of them would wait until the strait closed and go to Elkwan. What would McDonald Ha! Ha! offer for the service of Souci, Chief of the Elkwan Crees, to bring the northern hunters to the schooner at Christmas?"

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

NORTHWEST COAST INDIANS

I TOTEM POLES
This week I am going to tell you about the Indians who live on the Northwest coast, around Puget Sound and up along the coast of British Columbia.

A feature of the life of these Indians is their custom of having totem poles outside their homes. Totem poles are carved and painted posts or upright logs, often standing more than 15 feet high.

Splendid Recipe To Stop A Cough That "Hangs On"

The best cough remedy that money could buy, can easily be made at home. It saves money and gives you the most reliable, quick-acting medicine you ever used. The way it takes hold of stubborn coughs and chest colds, giving immediate relief, is astonishing.

Any drugist can supply you with 2 1/2 ounces of Pine. Pour this into a 16 oz. bottle, and fill up with plain granulated sugar syrup or strained honey. It's no trouble at all to mix, and when you once use it, you will never be without it. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children really like it.

It is surprising how quickly this home-made remedy loosens the germ-laden phlegm, and soothes and heals the inflamed membrane. At the same time, it is absorbed into the blood, where it acts directly on the bronchial tubes, and helps the system throw off the whole trouble. Even those severe coughs which usually follow the "flu", are promptly ended.

Pine is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway Pine, containing the active agent of cressonite, in a refined, palatable form. Nothing known in medicine is more helpful in cases of severe coughs, chest colds and bronchial troubles.

Do not accept a substitute for Pine. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief in every instance.

Sheer, delicately-tinted, the new underthings are more exquisite, more perishable than ever. Keep them like new with Lux!

Not robbed of silky loveliness Saved from two enemies

GUARD sheer silk underthings from the two enemies of delicate fabrics! Keep your vests and pretty slips, your knickers always like new!

The first enemy is rubbing with cake soap. Rubbing quickly dims the soft new bloom of silk. The second enemy is the destructive alkali in so many soaps, regardless of whether they are flakes, chips or cakes. Alkali fades colors, shortens the very life of the sensitive silk fibres.

With Lux you avoid all ruinous rubbing. Its tissue-thin diamonds can contain no harmful alkali. Lux gives your precious things back to you as fresh and lovely as new! Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto.

If it's safe in water--it's just as safe in Lux

A feature of the life of these Indians is their custom of having totem poles outside their homes. Totem poles are carved and painted posts or upright logs, often standing more than 15 feet high.

The face of a grizzly bear is shown with a large mouth, plenty of teeth, and a tongue which hangs out. What is the purpose of totem poles? They are part of the religion of the Indians. In many cases the faces are supposed to belong to ancestors of the family owning the pole. It seems to me that such a picture gallery would not be much to boast about!

Animals as well as men are called "ancestors" by these Indians. They declare that they are the offspring of bears, beavers, otters and so on. Some totem poles hold carvings of characters in myths which the Indians tell.

The carvings on totem poles are very strange to us; we may even say that they are weird. For the most part they are faces, but you will also find arms and legs of human beings, the fins of fish, and other images.

The faces are ugly, but a few of them seem to be trying to smile. Others look grouchy.

Some of the faces are supposed to belong to men, others to animals. The animal faces are not, very different from the human ones; but furry animals are given ears which stand out above the head and birds are given beaks instead of noses.

Among the birds are ravens, eagles and hawks. The ravens are given straight beaks, but the eagles and hawks have beaks which are curved or bent.

The face of a grizzly bear is shown with a large mouth, plenty of teeth, and a tongue which hangs out.
