The Murder at Hazelmoor

By AGATHA CHRISTIE

CHAPTER 23
"The evidence against James Pearson is all right," Inspector Narracott, admitted to the chief constable, "circumstantial as it is, but that, and any jury ought to convict on it. Still, what you say is true enough—I don't see him as a murderer."

"And his young lady is very active in the case," said the Chief Constable.

"Miss Trefusis, yes, she's a one and no mistake. A real fine young lady. And absolutely determined to get him off. She's got hold of that journalist, Enderby, and she's working him for all she's worth. She's a great deal too good for Mr. James Pearson. Beyond his good looks I wouldn't say there was much to him in the way of character."

"But of her managing young woman that's what she likes," said the Chief Constable.

"Ah, well," said Inspector Narracott, "there's no accounting for tastes. Well, you agree, sir, that I had better take up this alibi of Dering's without any more delay."

"Yes, get on to it at once. What about the fourth interested party in the will? There's a fourth, isn't there?"

"Yes, the sister. That's perfectly all right. I have made inquiries there. She was at home at six o'clock all right, sir. I'll get right on with the Dering business."

It was about five hours later that Inspector Narracott found Mr. Dering at home. He couldn't be disturbed as he was writing, the maid had said at first, but the inspector had produced an official card and bade her take it to her master without delay. While waiting he strode up and down the room. His mind was working actively. He picked up a rather battered old book. "Pride and Prejudice." He opened the cover and saw scrawled on the fly-leaf in faded ink the name, Martha Rycroft. Somehow, the name of Rycroft seemed familiar, but he could not for the moment remember why. He was interrupted as the door opened and Martin Dering came into the room.

The novelist was a man of middle height with thick rather heavy chestnut hair. He was dressed in a somewhat heavy fashion, with lips that were rather full and red.

Inspector Narracott was not prepossessed by his appearance.

"Good morning, Mr. Dering. Sorry to trouble you all here again."

"Oh, it doesn't matter, inspector, but really I can't tell you any more than you've been told already."

"We were led to understand that your brother-in-law, Mr. Brian Pearson, was in Australia. Now, we find that he has been in England for the last two months. Your wife distinctly told me that he was in New South Wales."

"Brian in England!" Dering seemed genuinely astonished. "I can assure you, inspector, that I have no knowledge of the fact—no, I'm sure, had my wife. Sylvia has twice written him letters to Australia during that time."

"Oh, well, in that case I apologize, sir. But naturally I thought he would have communicated with his relations and I was bit sore with you for holding out on me."

"Well, as I tell you we knew nothing. Have a cigarette, inspector? By the way, I see you've recaptured your escaped convict."

"Yes, got him late Tuesday night. Rather bad luck for him—the mist coming down. He walked right round in a circle. Did about twenty miles to find himself about half a mile from Princetown at the end of."

"Extraordinary how everyone goes round in circles in a fog. Good thing he didn't escape on the Friday. I suppose he would have had this murder put down to him as a certainty."

"It's a dangerous man, Freemanie Freddy, they used to call him. Robbery with violence, assault—led the most extraordinary double life. Half the time he passed as an educated, respectable wealthy man. A kind of criminal mania used to come over him from time to time. He would disappear and consort with the lowest characters."

"I suppose many people don't escape from Princetown?"

"It's well-nigh impossible, sir. But a particular escape was extraordinarily well planned and carried out. We haven't nearly got to the bottom of it yet."

"Well," Dering rose and glanced at his watch, "if there's nothing more, inspector—I'm afraid I am rather late for my dinner."

"Oh, but there is something more, Mr. Dering. I want to know why you told me that you were at a literary dinner at the Cecil Hotel on Friday night?"

"I don't understand you, inspector."

"I think you do, sir. You weren't at that dinner, Mr. Dering."

"Martin Dering hesitated. His eyes ran uncertainly from the inspector's face, up to the ceiling, then to the door, and then to his feet.

"The inspector waited calm and stolid."

"Well," said Martin Dering at last, "supposing I wasn't. What the hell has that got to do with you? What have my movements, five hours after my uncle was murdered, got to do with you or anyone else?"

"You made a certain statement to me, Mr. Dering, and I want that statement verified. Part of it has already proved to be untrue. I've got to check up on the other half. You say you lunched and spent the afternoon with a friend."

"It was the Gargantua," said Dering sullenly.

"Thank you, Mr. Dering. I thought you could remember if you could not recall the name of the ship you lunched with Mr. Rosenkranz and that you spent the afternoon with him. At what time did you leave him?"

"About five o'clock I should say."

"And then?"

"I decline to state. It's no business of yours. That's all you want surely."

Inspector Narracott nodded thoughtfully. If Rosenkranz confirmed Dering's statement, then any case against Dering must fall to the ground. Whatever his mysterious activities had been that evening could not affect the case.

"What are you going to do?" demanded Dering uneasily.

"Wireless Rosenkranz on board the Gargantua."

"Damn it all," cried Dering, "you'll involve me in all sorts of publicity. Look here—"

He went across to his desk, scribbled a few words on a bit of paper, then took it to the inspector.

"I suppose you've got to do what you're going to do, but at least you might do it in my way. It's not fair to run a chap in for a lot of trouble."

On the sheet of paper was written: Rosenkranz S. S. Gargantua. Please confirm my statement I was with you lunch-time until five o'clock Friday 14th. Martin Dering.

"Have the reply sent straight to you—I don't mind. But don't have it sent to Second Ward a police station. You don't know what these Americans are like. Any hint of me being mixed up in a police case and this new contract that I've been discussing will go to the winds. Keep it private matter, inspector."

"I have no objection to that, Mr. Dering. All I want is the truth. I'll send this reply paid, the reply to be sent to my private address in Exeter."

"Thank you, you are a good chap. It's not nice going around earning your living by literature, inspector. You'll see the answer will be all right. I did tell you a lie about the dinner, but as a matter of fact I had told my wife that that was where I had been, and I thought I might as well stick to it. I have a story to you. Otherwise I would have let myself in for a lot of trouble."

"If Mr. Rosenkranz confirms your statement, Mr. Dering, you will have nothing to fear."

"An unpleasant character," the inspector thought, as he left the house. "But he seems pretty certain that this American publisher will confirm the truth of his story."

A sudden remembrance came to the inspector as he stepped into the train which would take him back to Devon.

"Rycroft," he said, "of course—that's the name of the old gentleman who lives in one of the cottages at Sittaford. A curious coincidence."

Emily Trefusis and Charles Enderby were seated at a small table in Deller's Cafe in Exeter. It was half past three and at that hour there was comparative peace and quiet in the cafe.

"Well, as I tell you we knew nothing. Have a cigarette, inspector? By the way, I see you've recaptured your escaped convict."

"Yes, got him late Tuesday night. Rather bad luck for him—the mist coming down. He walked right round in a circle. Did about twenty miles to find himself about half a mile from Princetown at the end of."

"Extraordinary how everyone goes round in circles in a fog. Good thing he didn't escape on the Friday. I suppose he would have had this murder put down to him as a certainty."

"I suppose many people don't escape from Princetown?"

"It's well-nigh impossible, sir. But a particular escape was extraordinarily well planned and carried out. We haven't nearly got to the bottom of it yet."

W. C. T. U. Notes

IN MEMORIAM

Sometime at eve when the tide is I shall slip my moorings and sail away.

With no response to the friendly hall Of kindred craft in the busy bay, In the silent hush of the twilight pale

When the night stoops down to embrace the day; Sometime at eve when the tide is low, I shall slip my moorings and sail away.

Through the purpling shadows that darkly trail O'er the ebbing tide of the Unknown sea, I shall fare me away with dip of sail,

And a ripple of water to tell the tale Of a lonely voyager sailing away To the Mystic Isle, where at anchor lay

The crafts of those who have sailed before O'er the Unknown Sea to the Unknown shore.

A few who have watched me sail away Will miss my craft from the busy bay; Some friendly barks that were anchored near,

Some loving souls that my heart hold dear In silent sorrow will drop a tear— But I will have peacefully furl'd my sail

In moorings sheltered from storm or gale, And greeted the friends who have sailed before O'er the Unknown Sea to the Unknown shore.

THE INSIDIOUS ENCROACHMENT OF LIQUOR

Before the introduction of National Prohibition in the U. S. there was practically no prohibition movement in Europe except in some northern countries. In fact the strong religious societies believed that prohibition was unscriptural, but a universal movement set on foot when United States banned drink, which threatened to spread the world. There followed victory after victory for temperance reform covering a period of years, but with the organization of the International League against Prohibition, a battle was begun to weaken enforcement of prohibition, to discredit it, and prevent other nations following.

They organized on National and International lines, in every country associations were formed of adverse economic conditions. In the cases of older children where parents have had much worry, this is reflected in the youngsters' emotional attitudes. They show more or less uncertainty and a lacking in stability."

"But the sum total of the depression's effects on child health has been so much less than expected by social and health workers that we are elated."

A warning was sounded to the members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Canada by Dr. Ella A. Boole of Brooklyn N. Y., who was guest speaker and advised at the Dominion convention held recently in Winnipeg, when she told of the terrible increase in crime and bootlegging had increased enormously since going back on the repeal of the 18th Amendment. She took as her topic "The Fight Against the Black Bottle," which she said would be the slogan of the W.C.T.U. in the United States in the great campaign now launched against the liquor traffic. Emphasizing the fact in her address that it was no longer the style to serve liquor cocktails, she pointed out that it was quite the proper thing to refuse to drink intoxicants at parties, especially among the younger generation. Tomato juice and fruit were quite the fashion in the really good society. In connection with the Canadian W. C. T. U., Prince Edward Island was the only province in the Dominion that had held out against the ravages of the liquor interests and the membership in the union had been increased. The United Farm Women's League had asked their school trustees not to hire teachers who smoked. In Bulgaria it was required that school teachers neither smoke nor drink. It was pointed out that the W.C.T.U. members as White Ribboners should keep on working, having "agitators, educators, lecturers as their aims. A report to this effect was presented by Mrs. S. Thoms, delegate from the Moose Jaw branch, to the convention, at the last meeting of the local group.

"Putting all personal considerations on one side, he's a more likely starter than Jim?" said Enderby.

"Much more likely. He would carry a thing through well—because he would never lose his nerve."

"Honestly, Emily, do you think he did it?"

"I—I don't know. He fulfils the conditions—the only person who does."

"What do you mean by fulfils the conditions?"

"Well (1) Motive. She ticked off the items on her fingers. "The same motive. Twenty thousand or more pounds. (2) Opportunity. Nobody knew where he was on Friday afternoon, and if he was anywhere that he could say—well—surely he would say it? So we assume that he was actually in the neighborhood of Hazelmoor on Friday."

TO ENCOURAGE AGRICULTURE

ST. JOHN'S Nfld., Sept. 20. — (CP)—Dr. W. G. Ogg, head of the Macaulay Institute for Soil Research in Scotland, is in Newfoundland to make a complete survey and analysis of the island's soil to encourage agriculture here. He came to Newfoundland on the invitation of the Department of Natural Resources.

Another aspect, prominent in the results of this ignorance in the present time when such a large portion of the population are handling motors, and this condition is in conjunction with the facts that liquors are cheap and available in many places at a roadside inn.

W.C.T.U. Convention

The annual convention of the Provincial Women's Christian Temperance Union was held at York, on September 18, 1935.

In the unavoidable absence, through illness, of the President, Mrs. W. A. Thompson, the chair was capably filled by Mrs. J. F. McNeill, Summerside.

At the afternoon session encouraging reports were heard from the different officers, and business was transacted.

At the evening session, after devotional exercises, in which Rev. Mr. Christie of York and Rev. Mr. Paterson of Cavendish assisted, an interesting program was carried out, and an inspiring address was given by Mrs. V. L. Miller of Halifax, who is at the present time making a coast-to-coast trip of Canada in the interests of temperance, and is to speak at different places on the Island. Mrs. Miller stated that the present time offers an exceptional opportunity to do intensive work against alcohol, which she characterized as the Devil in Solution, and stressed the need of "multiplied personal influence" on the part of all temperance workers.

Some interesting resolutions were passed, which will be published at a later date.

Lunch was served to the delegates by the York Union.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: Hon. Pres.—Mrs. W. A. Thompson Charlottetown.

President—Mrs. Hazen Howard, Cornwall. Vice-Pres.—Mrs. John McNeill, Summerside.

Rec. Sec'y—Mrs. W. D. Drake, Cornwall. Cor. Sec'y—Mrs. Boothroyd, Hunter River.

Treasurer—Mrs. Toombs, Free-town.

DEPRESSION HAS NOT LEFT DEEP MARK ON CHILD'S HEALTH

CHICAGO, Sept. 20—An optimistic answer to the question "what effect has the depression had on the health of America's children?" was given today at the directors' meeting of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

The depression has not left as deep a mark on child health as was feared, Dr. Lillian R. Smith of Lansing, Mich., said in discussing reports of health examinations sponsored by the National Congress.

Dr. Smith, who is also director of child hygiene and public nursing in the Michigan Department of Health said a check was made on the health of thousands of babies born at the advent of depression as well as of older children who have experienced one or more years of adverse economic conditions.

"In the cases of older children where parents have had much worry, this is reflected in the youngsters' emotional attitudes. They show more or less uncertainty and a lacking in stability."

But the sum total of the depression's effects on child health has been so much less than expected by social and health workers that we are elated."

LONG FULL COAT

The long full coat with large sleeves has always been a favorite of Louisbolanger, but it is a fairly generally endorsed style this season as well; a smart version is done in a black dull pebbly woolen, collared and cuffed in Persian lamb; the silk cord which ties it at the neck is tipped by two gold hooks.

Canada as well as in the United States, is the growing respectability of the drinking habit.

According to this safety authority whose statements are founded on scientific tests, three highballs will slow up all reactions necessary in driving an automobile."

The blame for the increase of motor accidents since the repeal of prohibition—and there is no doubt as to this increase—is not all on the shoulders of the drinking driver, but it is put where it belongs. To cite this writer:

"Drinking is a social custom... This the responsibility of leaders is particularly great. One invites twelve friends in for the evening. They all come in cars. Should cocktails be served? People of influence and strength must set an example if drinking-driving is to become in the popular mind as reprehensible a practice as it actually is."

HOPEFIELD INSTITUTE NEWS

The regular meeting of the Hopefield Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Roderick MacKay, on Sept. 11th. Meeting opened by singing the Institute Rally Song followed by Creed in 10 members. Roll call was answered by 10 members by naming a "Canadian town and what it is noted for."

There were five visitors present. Reports were given by school committees. Some discussion took place regarding raising funds and it was decided to hold a box social and Banquet in the near future, the younger members of the Institute being appointed to plan for same. A paper on "Pickles Recipes and a comical reading "On being chided" was given by Mrs. Alice Blue. Meeting closed by singing God save the King after which lunch was served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. Arthur Mann and Miss Emily Buell and Miss Christy MacLeod. Next meeting to be held at the home of Miss Emily Buell.

REPLY TO PRAYER

What you need most of all (don't this true?) is strength to take disappointment and not be bowled over, strength to look poverty straight in the face if you have to, strength to meet temptation, and not be beaten by it, strength to endure the fruitless of the flesh every day and do it sturdily—strength to take life as it comes, with all its difficulties, and not flinch.

That is the kind of help to which prayer leads you.—W. Rhodes.

EAST ROYALTY W.I.

The September meeting of East Royalty Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Alex McNevin on Thursday evening, Sept. 19th. The meeting was called to order by the President and opened with the Institute Ode and creed in unison. Roll call was responded to by twelve members, also four visitors present. The minutes of the previous meeting approved as read. Galsworthy reports from the various committees, and the following new ones appointed. School, Mrs. Arthur Robertson, and Mrs. Nell Darrach. Sick, Mrs. Harold Clements and Mrs. Chester Smith. The festival committee reported all bills of festival paid. A bill of $1.70 presented and ordered paid. It was moved and seconded Mrs. Nell Darrach give the reply to the address of welcome at the District Convention, also we have a demonstration on needle work by Mrs.

Wait! Spanking may be the wrong prescription

There may be times when a child's behavior calls for a bit of sturdy, old-fashioned discipline. But nine times out of ten—no!

If your child is unduly fretful, whiney, or cross and hard to manage—suspect that something is wrong! All too often you will find that it is childhood's commonest ailment—constipation.

Give him a laxative, but—be careful his whole digestive system is upset! It is safe, gentle, yet it is thorough. Your doctor will tell you that it contains nothing that is not suitable for a child's delicately balanced system.

And children take Castoria without a word of protest—they love its taste. Get Castoria to-day—and save money by getting the large, family-size bottle!

McNevin and a chorus at night by come of the young girls. Roll call for next meeting answered by house hold hints. Next meeting at the home of Mrs. Harold Clements. The singing of the National Anthem brought a pleasant evening to a close.

PISQUID WEST INSTITUTE

Mrs. Kenneth Jay entertained the members of Pisquid West Institute, an attendance of ten members and nine visitors, at her home for the month of September. The meeting opened by all singing the Institute Ode, followed by recitation of the creed. The minutes of previous meeting were then read and signed. The reports of the different committees were heard and new ones appointed. After hearing the school report it was moved and seconded that four new shades be purchased, also dust pan and coal "hod." The sick committee reported that they had visited the sick members and had brought fruit to each. A discussion on how to help the Junior Red Cross members took place, many helpful suggestions being heard from the visiting ladies of neighboring branches. The program consisted of two contests the first being a guessing contest, put on by Mrs. Aeneas McKim and won by Mrs. Andrew McKim. The second, a real brain tester, was put on by Mrs. J. D. MacDonald and won by Mrs. Fred Jay. Roll call for next meeting will be answered with your
