Jury Reaches No Conclusion Over MacKinnon Death

A coroner's jury last night decided there was not sufficient evidence before them to find how the late Ewen MacKinnon, 236 Fitzroy Street, Charlottetown, came to his death.

Coroner Dr. J. D. MacGunglison adjourned the inquest until Thursday, May 23 in order to give the police time to bring other witnesses before the jury.

Mr. G. R. Holmes, K.C., represented the Crown at the inquest. John D. MacDonald, the first witness, said he lived in Charlottetown and knew the deceased. The witness with John Coyle and the late Mr. MacKinnon were working on the loading of the "Island Connector" on June 4 and 5. Witness left them about 3.45 p. m. Thursday, June 5. The deceased appeared in normal condition.

Dr. Harold Shaw said he performed an autopsy on the body of the late Ewen MacKinnon at 9.15 on the morning of June 16. From the condition of the lungs, the deceased had been breathing when he went into the water. The lungs were full of water and there were no signs of external injuries.

Asked to explain why blood flowed freely from one ear after the body had been brought ashore, Dr. Shaw expressed the opinion that removal of the body from the water likely caused abrasions to the membrane of the ear this allowing congested blood to escape.

John Coyle said he and the late Mr. MacKinnon did the same kind of work that day of potato inspection. Witness had worked with the deceased on June 5. They had walked over to the warehouse of the Associated Shippers together. Mr. MacKinnon appeared normal in every way. Witness had left him about 4.45 p. m., June 5, at the foot of Great George Street, near the Bruce Stewart Wharf.

Elmer McLaughlin, 212 Keble Street, City, said he was a co-witness in the case. He had not seen the deceased since Saturday, May 31.

Percy Vail, lower Quebec Street, City, said he was working Friday morning, June 6, repairing his chimney. About 9 o'clock that morning, the deceased passed walking north, and said: "The rain is not over yet."

Coroner: "You feel sure of your identification?" Witness: "Yes."

Witness said he did not know whether the deceased had been in witness's shop that morning. Witness was working on a stage most of the morning. James Phillips was working with witness at the time the deceased went by. Clifton Keenan spoke to the witness after the disappearance of MacKinnon had become known and asked the witness: "Is that the man who passed here the other morning and I asked you what he did?"

Elmer McLaughlin (re-called) said the deceased had been home Thursday evening, June 5, and had his supper.

Joseph Dunning said he was an apprentice jeweller. A watch, said to belong to the late Ewen MacKinnon was placed in his hands for examination. The hands of the watch were stopped at 2.25. Some water had gotten into the watch and the main spring was broken. Witness said the subject of a watch worn on one's wrist to cold water could cause the main spring to break. It was the opinion of witness that the break in the spring was a recent one. The stopping of the watch could be caused either by the breaking of the spring, or by the breaking of the watch.

Fred McCreary said he was unloading hay on Buntin and Bell's Wharf, Thursday night, June 5, when he saw the late Mr. MacKinnon. The time was about 8.40. Mr. MacKinnon spoke to the witness. That was the last time witness saw the deceased. The next morning two little boys came and asked witness if he had seen Mr. MacKinnon that morning. Witness said "no." The deceased appeared normal when witness left him Thursday night.

Chesler, chief of the Dominion Department of Agriculture said all the inspection reports of the deceased up to June 5 had been turned in. Witness said the deceased had told Mr. William MacLeod of the Department that he was not feeling well and had a pain in his chest.

Before the war Canada had obtained most of its vegetable seed from Europe and when these supplies were cut off it was necessary to start growing for ourselves. Seed production programs were established in 1943 and in the next four years Canada exported more than 10,000,000 pounds of seed, representing about 13 per cent of production.

Says F.D.R. Frowned On Henry Wallace For U. S. President

WASHINGTON, June 19—(AP)—James A. Farley said today that the late President Roosevelt told him he did not think the Democrats should run Henry A. Wallace for president in 1940 because "you never know what Henry will do."

Farley, former chairman of the Democratic national committee, related the story in the second of a Collier's magazine series of articles on "Why I broke with Roosevelt."

The name of Wallace, then Secretary of Agriculture, came up in dinner conversation at the White House April 12, 1938, Farley said.

The current article depicts Roosevelt as a man who thought former Mayor La Guardia of New York had a "swelled head" and considered Henry Morgenthau, former Secretary of the Treasury, a "lunatic."

Farley said he told Roosevelt, in discussing La Guardia for Governor of New York: "La Guardia has a swelled head, and it's my guess that he has presidential aspirations."

Once, said Farley, when he asked about Morgenthau's health, the President replied lightly: "Oh, Henry works himself up. While I was away he was terribly concerned about the tripartite agreement between the United States, France and Britain on money stabilization."

"I'll have to rub his brow and he'll be all right."

ment, exhibits entered by the Crown included three suicide notes allegedly penned by the blonde bride, and a lengthy statement by Barrie.

The small courtroom started to fill up two hours before the inquest started, with the women in the majority. The husky 28-year-old Barrie, dressed in a tan tropical suit, and Kettlewell entered the courtroom five minutes before the proceedings started.

After the supper adjournment, the hearing continued with reading of the letters written by the dead woman.

One of the letters, said to have been written by Christina prior to her marriage, inferred that the man who was to become her husband had no love for her and that she had attempted suicide.

The letter was addressed to Barrie. "I guess this will be the best way," said the letter. "I might as well face the fact that Jack doesn't care a hoot about me. I have done everything but propose and he hasn't asked me to marry him."

"This will be the best way out as I couldn't bear to see any other girl have him. I am sorry but what could I do? I'm sorry to have to do this and I know you will never forgive me."

Kettlewell was allowed to step down at 10.05 p. m. and an inquest agent with whom the surgeon agent was questioned about the policies he had taken out. The inquest was then adjourned until 10 a. m. Friday.

MOVE AIMED

Dealing with commercial accommodation, the Minister said the Government did not intend to ask Parliament for authority to retain rental and eviction controls on this type of accommodation after legislation now continuing them expires March 31, 1948.

"The House will recall that, on March 1 last, as part of the program of orderly decontrol, certain items of commercial space, chiefly new commercial buildings, commercial buildings rented for the first time or for a term of three or more years, as well as commercial space which had been sub-let, were removed from control.

"At the same time a provision was made which would enable the landlord of any commercial space to obtain a 25-per cent increase of the maximum rental by offering to his tenant a two-year renewal lease on certain terms and conditions. These measures provided a free bargaining opportunity with respect to a substantial proportion of commercial space, and experience has indicated that many landlords and tenants have taken advantage of it.

Give Findings On Belgian Surrender

BRUSSELS, June 19—(Reuters)—Allegations that King Leopold of the Belgians surrendered to the Germans in 1940 without warning his British and French allies were rejected as "entirely false" in the report of the commission set up to investigate the exiled King's actions, made public here tonight.

King Leopold visited Hitler at Berchtesgaden in November, 1940, to avoid reprisals which the Germans would have taken against the Belgian people if he had persisted in refusing, the report said. He previously had refused to see Hitler twice.

Of the King's second marriage to Mile. Mary Lillian Baels on Sept. 11, 1941, the report said it could have no political consequences as his wife could not become queen, and children of the marriage and their descendants could have no claim to the throne.

Too Late To Classify

The Prices Board order to prevent boarding or rooming house operators from classifying themselves as hotels and thus evading rental regulations, stipulates that no property may be considered a hotel unless the operator previously has filed his maximum rates with the Board or receives, after application to the regional rentals officer, a certificate designating the property as a hotel.
