PRINCE EDWARD THEATRE

This two-part drama heading the fine picture programme at the Prince Edward, featuring Cleo Madison and Joe King, tells the story of the regeneration of a heartless woman, who, while her child is dying, spends her time playing bridge, and is only torn away when her fortune is wasted. A stirring scene takes place when the beggarly woman attempts to recover the I.O.U.'s which she has handed out right and left and which have been recovered by an adventurer who has carefully planned to entrap her. Also included in the cast is Edward Sloman, who enacted so admirably the part of Trine in "The Treason of Hearts."

Another two-part feature of merit was "The Friendship of Lamond," taking into consideration the plot, the embellishment of the exterior scenes and the excellent acting of the cast, which is confined to half-a-dozen characters. Ormi Hawley plays the leading role, that of the young wife, who is finally brought to a sense of her shortcomings by the self-sacrifice of her husband's best friend.

"Two Aristocratic Penitents," a Vitagraph special one-reel feature, "The Hearst-Selig Weekly," with some splendid war views, and "Those Dutch Bowlers," a comedy scream, made up the balance of an exceptionally good programme.
