"A Notorious Gentleman"
 At Capitol Today Only

An absorbing atmosphere of suspense is the keynote of "A Notorious Gentleman," the Universal drama which opens an engagement at the Capitol theatre today.

Charles Bickford plays the principal male part, and has never been seen to better advantage. Appearing opposite him is Helen Vinson, whose beauty and talent in the picture add vastly to the success of the whole. Excellent performances are likewise given by Dudley Digges, Sidney Backmer and Onslow Stevens.

In the story Bickford is presented as a clever criminal lawyer who continually secures verdicts of acquittal in favor of clients undoubtedly guilty of murder, solely through the manufacturing of ingenious evidence. But when Miss Vinson, now a famous actress, visits her home town, Bickford, and his enemy, Blackmer, both become suitors for her hand, and finally the lawyer, after an elaborate planning of his own defense, kills his rival.

How the story progresses to its surprising climax makes a screen-play of unusual interest.

NARROW ESCAPE--While hauling his smelt net at Winter River Thursday, the boat from which Arthur Clow was working overturned. He managed to right the boat and as he continued his work the craft again overturned. This time, however, he was unable to right the boat and was obliged to cling to it. His 18-year-old nephew, Alfred Clow, noticed his plight and putting out in another boat, brought the victim to shore.
