BRIDE'S INITIAL PROBLEM
SOMETIMES BOTHERS HER

When a bride is choosing a monogram for her silverware she may use the initials of her maiden name or those of her own first and last names with the bride-groom's last initial added. An old custom, recently revived, is to use a large initial of the bridegroom's family and place above it smaller initials of her first and his first names, joined by a small plus sign.

Lorne Valley And Vicinity

What appears to be a new species of bird life, at least in these parts, can be seen almost daily feeding over the newly harvested grain fields. The birds, a little smaller than wild geese, sometimes arrive in large flocks. They are of many colors and appear to be very shy. Several attempts to shoot one has so far proved futile. These birds are certainly not common to Prince Edward Island, but maybe some of our readers can identify them from the above description.

According to the Prince Edward Island Register of August, 1830, the "Richard Smith" was the first steamer to nose her way into Charlottetown Harbor.

We cannot all be scientific farmers, but we can all be good farmers. And the better we are able to manage our farms the better we shall be able, if it is in us to produce live stock and crops of excellent quality.

THE PAINTING OF THE SCHOOL-HOUSE

The trustee board sat in stately array, And each looked so solemn, in a comical way. Discussing the manner of painting the school; Sur t'wasn't a job to be done without a rule.

"As money was scarce, and as hard to find As teeth in a hen, would everyone mind Supplying some paint? and giving some time?" So 'twas decided—things ought to be fine!

Each was to bring his own pot, paint and brush Begin where he wished, only stop when he must Spread it on thick, or sprit it on thin So long as the necessary time is put in.

And so the big day of the painting meleé Arrived with the sun as fair as could be Coming from 'ar in Chev. Stude, or Ford Could be seen the brave artists, the trustee board.

"The crop can't be neglected—but this job must be done So lets get her started" said one to each one. "You, You, You paint her here, and I'll paint her there And we'll finish her up, if everything's fair."

So they finished her up, 'twas a noble fight. But when they stood back to admire the sight What should appear to their horrified view But a school house, painted, but various hues.

At least four shades of green, and three of red. White, and cream, and black so 'tis said. But there's one consolation," said one in some fun. "There isn't another looks just like this one!"

So there she stands, like the chimney, o' fame The amazement of all good people who came And they came, and they laugh and they almost bust.

At the artists, who each brought his own paint, and brush. —S. H. Yorston, Southport.

NO HALF WAY GROUND

With God there is no Half Way Ground
With Him no Middle Way
But straight and narrow is the path
That leads to the Eternal Day.

No Half Way Ground can'er be found
To travel day by day,
If we would win, the world from sin
Must walk the straight and narrow way.

With God there is no Half Way Ground
We're either bad or good
The path is hard, the way is long
If we travel as we should.

With God there is no Half Way Ground,
Neutral we cannot be,
We must accept the Gift of God
Salvation full and free.

We cannot do what Satan bids
And still be in God's bound
We walk the High Way or the Low
There is no Half Way Ground.

Spelling Spider Causes Excitement

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 9 (AP)—If a long-legged spider accosts you as you pass a garden in this city and asks you to step into his parlor, have no fears. The insect simply wants to show you it can spell.

Detroit yesterday appeared in the throes of discovering a new species of spider, which in addition to weaving gossamer webs for dew to lie on, struggles valiantly for literary expression.

Ever since the discovery, a few days ago, of Renfrew, the famous word-and-sentence writing spider, the furore has been increasing. There were eight known literary bugs in the city yesterday, enough to start an art movement.

Patrons of these creatures who appear to write a James Joycean or Gertrude Stein-esque prose are ordinarily normal citizens.

Championship is claimed by Mrs. Eugene Wagner, among whose rose bushes and peony stalks on Mayfield Avenue lurked three spellers. Papa Spider, a long, thin fellow, attempted to compliment Mrs. Wagner's husband by writing Eugene, but it fizzled into just Jeann.

Mama, a bit more plump, proclaimed her identity as Mary Ellen. The tiny fellow, in the peony stalks, whose education is necessarily limited by his tender years, chose an easier name—Mac.

"Renfrew," the famous writing spider of Harrison Avenue, starter of the craze, may be getting temperamental. At the crack of dawn yesterday the bug was painstakingly spelling out "muo." There was a lot of head scratching, because no word in the dictionary begins like that. Well, it started to rain. Angrily Renfrew destroyed his message and no one will ever know what he was going to tell his constituents.

According to Mrs. John Burns, upon whose iris plant Renfrew spins, she doesn't mind the curiosity-seekers who swarm all over her front yard and porch, but she resented the woman who walked right into her house before dawn Friday to inquire about the spider's health, habits, love life, etc.

Out on Central Avenue on Mrs. John Van Havermaat's iris plant, "High Hat" does some plain and fancy spinning, too. But it keeps you guessing, leaves out all the vowels and spells something like "jwzxxwzwe," which, when you figure it out, spells like the call of a short-wave radio station in Wales.

The biggest spelling spider and the most beautiful lives on the hedge of Christopher Gasser's home on Sussex Ave. So far it has turned out only unintelligible wordage, but yards of it.

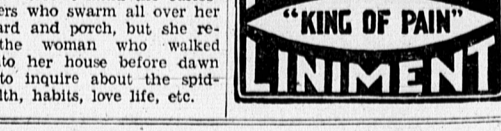

GINGER PUDDING

One-quarter cup shortening, ¼ cup granulated sugar, 1 egg, ¼ cup flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ¼ teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon ginger, ¼ cup milk.

Cream shortening until soft. Blend in sugar and beat in egg, which has been well beaten. Sift together the dry ingredients and add alternately with the milk to first mixture. Turn into greased mould and steam 2½ hours. This recipe makes four portions.
