An Adventure In Years

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XVI

All during Ned Campbell's sickness and his convalescence Dora Delong and her father had been constant in their inquiries and in their attentions to the invalid. Fruit dainties of various kinds, had found their way from the Delong kitchen, where an expert cook ruled, instead of the maid of all work, Sonia managed to get along with it. It had only been in the last two weeks that either father or daughter had seen the invalid. But now nearly every day Dora either walked or rode over and spent an hour chatting with him—and with Sonia if she happened to be about.

If there was nothing bold in Dora, nothing forward or pushing. She seemed unconscious of the sex of the invalid and would sit on the steps, laughing and chatting, telling bits of gossip, just as she would had he been a girl. Then, too, the presence of either Strong or Sonia never seemed to annoy her. Instead, she appeared to be delighted when they were all together.

In the face of this unconsciousness Sonia's jealousy faded. Surely, if the girl were in love with Ned, she would show it in some way. She would want to be alone with him, or in some way resent the constant presence of others. But she was so gay, so frank, that it was impossible to ignore her. There was an irresistible charm attached to her to what she said, to her every graceful movement. Yet whenever she was with him, Sonia was wrapped in a sort of gentle melancholy, often causing her to go abruptly into the house, leaving Ned and Dora alone.

Then it was the girl's eyes would brighten, her soft rounded cheeks flush with happiness, and her voice take on a tone just a bit more intimate. Beverly Strong had become aware of this and often would chuckle to himself. Dora and Ned often speculated as to who had fired the shot that night after they came in from their sail. But as yet no one had been found who could throw any light upon the matter. Had Ned Campbell died, the authorities would most likely have bestirred themselves. But in this sleepy little town one could not expect much activity unless it were absolutely vital.

Sonia often had urged Strong to keep the matter alive, to urge that more be done to find the man who either by accident or design had shot Ned. But a shrug of his shoulders, a reply that was to her—calmly indifferent was all the interest she could arouse.

"The boy's going to be all right. What's the use stirring up any thing? Even if we found the person who fired the shot, what good would it do? Probably some poor devil firing at some night bird. It would be a satisfaction to know," Sonia had urged. "To whom? To you? I am sure Ned doesn't seem particularly keen to make any more trouble." He made a little sound with his lips, Sonia hated, always had hated, ever since she had married Strong. Then he added, "Better forget all about it, Sonia."

"Yes—that would be best I think." She shot him a probing glance. She could hear Ned and Dora talking, the murmur of their voices coming indistinctly to her. She lay back in her chair and closed her eyes when Beverly left her. The curtains at the open window fluttered in the breeze.

Is from Heaven looking at you Glad to see you do not cry For if all your trust you practice, You feel sure he cannot die.

But has only gone before you Gone to a far better land Where his grandfather Just now holds his little hand.

In loving memory of Blanche Evelyn Shaw who died April 25th, 1920.
"E'en for the dead we will not bind our souls to grief,
Death cannot long divide For it is not as though the rose that climbed my garden wall
Has blossomed on the other side;
Death doth hide, but not divide; Thou art but on Christ's other side
Thou art with Christ, and Christ with us;
In Christ united still are we,"

CASTORIA

The sweet scent of old-fashioned flowers came stealing in, the voices went on murmuring. Her thoughts wandered. What was life? (So few would know until Life had sported with them and then thrown them upon the rocks of Experience, where Knowledge held court. When youth laughed at the dangerous rocks, or if not shrugged youthful shoulders, impatiently declaring they did not care and that to make hay while the sun shone was the way to live. If the harvest was disappointing—well—they had something to look back upon something no one could tear from them.)

She thought of Ned and Dora out on the porch. She felt such an immeasurable distance away. In a mirror opposite she unconsciously caught a glimpse of herself. "Old tired eyes!" she muttered. Then thought of those other eyes, Dora's eyes, the serene, wistful eyes of untouched youth.

Rising abruptly she moved to the open window. The voices now came distinctly to her. She heard her name. They were talking of her. "No, she's not old." It was Ned's voice. "But she must be almost thirty! I shall feel horribly old when I am thirty."

"No, Mrs. Strong isn't old, and she is—so beautiful!" The boy's voice was softly cadenced as he spoke the last words. "Isn't she lovely?" The girl's clear, honest tones came clearly. "But being lovely and being young are two different things. I think I'd rather be young! I hate the idea of getting old, seeing things with old eyes."

Sonia moved away. That was it—seeing things with old eyes. (To be Continued.)

IN MEMORIAM

A deep gloom was cast over the Head of Hillsboro and surrounding districts when on Friday evening, April 18th, it was learned that James Lyman youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson Douglas had passed away at the tender age of 3 years, 8 months and 4 days. All that medical skill and kind loving hands could do for him was done but God willed otherwise and too; little Lyman to Himself. He had been sick but 23 days.

He is gone the chubby darling, Who made your lives so glad, Yet he just changed home for Heaven So why should you be so sad.

Your dear babe is with the angels Playing, laughing, never sad And if you could see your darling, Your crushed heart would be glad.

Baby came to give you sunshine He so handsome, sweet and bright But our Father, up above us Wanted him, the little mite.

Baby's mother reared him gently And the love she gave to him, Now her empty arms are aching, And her eyes are ever dim.

Yet her dear one is in Heaven Far above the bright blue sky And our Father good and holy Over him keeps watchful eye.

Just try hard to soothe your sorrow When 'tis evening look above, And instead of bitter weeping Think perhaps your little love about it, Sonia."

Is from Heaven looking at you Glad to see you do not cry For if all your trust you practice, You feel sure he cannot die.

But has only gone before you Gone to a far better land Where his grandfather Just now holds his little hand.

More Speed—A New Gear

for Ford Truck

THE 7-1 Standard Worm-Gear used exclusively on the Ford Truck was designed for carrying heavy loads under all conditions. It has proved entirely satisfactory.

Experience has shown, however, that owners operating on smooth country roads or city pavements with light bulky loads often desire to operate at a speed of over 15 miles per hour.

To meet this condition we have designed a new gear which permits greater road speed without undue increase of engine speed. Equipped with the new gear your Ford Truck will develop a speed of from 20-25 miles per hour.

The New 5-1 Gear is now optional equipment on all Ford Trucks, or can be obtained from Ford Dealers and Service Stations for Ford Trucks now in operation.

Free Records

Free records is a phrase much used now-a-days by some who would have the purchaser believe he is getting something for nothing.

WE DO NOT GIVE ANY FREE RECORDS!

We sell Gramophones and Records at Lowest Prices consistent with fair dealing to our customers and ourselves, and the public may as well understand that in the final analysis THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS FREE RECORDS.

Did we give free records it would be necessary for us to charge more for our gramophones, or furnish AN INSTRUMENT INFERIOR IN QUALITY. In either case the purchaser when he would come to know the truth would be sore, not only on us, but on the music business in general. We believe ours is an honourable business, and are determined to keep it so by selling honest goods at honest prices.
