Bright New Slip Covers

SMART SLIP COVER

That faded Cinderella of your chairs may become a queen overnight. For today you can pin on colorful spring slip-cover material—and tomorrow you can baste and finish.

It's as simple as that to make such a smart slip cover.

Working the pin-on way, remove the chair cushion and smooth your fabric over the inside-back and seat, leaving a four-inch tuck-in between. For welted seams, work with fabric wrong side out. Then you pin every three inches and cut off surplus material outside the pins, allowing 1½ inches for seams and baste, inserting the welting from the right side.

This half completes your slip cover! All that remains is to stitch it up and add the fringe.

Our 32-page booklet gives exact details, step-by-step diagrams for making slip covers for differently shaped chairs and sofas, also auto seats. Tells how to trim, make pleated flounces.

Send 15 cents in coins for your copy of How to Make Slip Newspapers, to the Charlottetown Guardian Home Service Address. Be sure to write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Dorothy Dix Says—

WOMAN WASTES TIME TRYING TO IMITATE HUSBAND'S LOVE LURE

Given Chance, He'll Return To Upright Wife Who Gave Him Children, Good Home

DEAR MISS DIX—My husband decided a year ago that life with the children and myself was not what he wanted, and has left us. He said that he had lived a lie so long that he couldn't go on with it any more, yet up to that time he had been as good and kind a husband and father as anyone could ask for. During the past year many things have made me realize that I must start a new form of education if I am ever going to interest him again.

The current woman in the case is a typical government girl in her late thirties, very sophisticated, loves bowling, races, night clubs, beach parties and cocktail parties in her apartment. She dresses as if she were going to a party all the time. This, in general, seems to be the type that a man of forty desires.

In contrast, I am the natural type. I love to dance, enjoy sports of all kinds, have been a good mother, and used to think I was a good wife, but apparently I have failed. My husband has paid well for his sophisticated education, and I also would be willing to pay well for any education that would bring his interest home again. C. C. W.

NO COLLEGE COURSE IN REVIVING LOVE

ANSWER—Alas, there is no school, nor college, nor university that can teach a wife how to light again the fires of love in the heart of a husband who has grown tired of her; yet that is a branch of the higher education for women that many a one needs more than she does a knowledge of all the ologies and isms, and that she would sell her very life blood to get.

Sometimes, of course, a wife drives her husband from her and kills his affection for her by her temper, by her nagging, by her bossing, by her laziness and shiftlessness and bad cooking, but there are not enough shrews and slovens and female Hitlers to account for all of the philandering husbands. Just as often the good wives and mothers are forsaken as the bad ones. And just why so many men get tired of the wives they picked out no one knows. Perhaps they don't know themselves.

So when a woman starts to change herself over into something nearer to her husband's heart's desire, she is undertaking a hard job. If she is middle-aged, she cannot turn herself into a glamorous sub-deb. If she has been a hard working woman who has pinched pennies and done her own cooking and baby-tending in order to help her husband pile up the fortune he is spending on other women, how can she suddenly become a wisecracking sophisticate? If she has worn bungalow aprons all of her life, how can she transform herself into a Power's model?

The answer is, of course, that she can't. And I think she is foolish to waste any time and energy in imitating a role for which Nature did not cast her. Because, in the first place, she would be a misfit. And, in the second place, because no husband wants a wife who is an understudy of a loose lady. And, thirdly and lastly, because it was variety that he was seeking, not two women who were as much alike in conversation and dress and drinking habits as two peas in a pod.

Let your husband go his gait and the time will come when your truth and honesty and integrity will appeal to him more than the pinchback charms of the women for whom he has forsaken you, and he will come back to home and Mother, if you still want him.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX—Sally likes a boy in the Army, but she won't write to him because he took out another girl, who, in turn, is going with a fellow in the Navy. Sally and the boy are not engaged, but they used to work together in the same defense plant and he took her home in the evenings. But she is so angry with him about his going with the other girl that she wouldn't even shake hands with him when he came to say goodbye to her parents and her before leaving for the service. Did she do right, or wrong? MARGARET.

GIRLS LOSE BOYS BEING TOO POSSESSIVE

ANSWER—She used neither good sense nor good manners in dealing with the situation. As she was not engaged to the boy, she had no right to object of his going with any girl or every girl he happened to meet.

A lot of girls lose boys by being too possessive. Nothing infuriates a man so much as a woman asserting proprietorship over him. He thinks it is bad enough to have to wear the ball and chain after marriage, and he certainly doesn't intend to let any girl clamp them on him while he is still single.

DEAR MISS DIX—I have been married a little more than a year and I love my husband very very much. He has been wonderful to me until a few days ago when I found out that he is writing love letters to a girl to whom she was engaged before we were married. He told her in one of his letters that he loved her and would as long as he lived, and she sent me the letter. He also writes me every day that he loves me more than I will ever know. And he has me wondering which one of us he really loves.

I think his ex-sweetheart is not encouraging him, or, else she would not have sent me his letter. What do you think I should do? WONDERING.

ANSWER—I think that you should ask for a showdown and make your husband decide which one of you he really loves. Evidently he is one of the men with too much heart who slops his affection over every female with whom he comes in contact. Or maybe, and this is very likely, he thinks he has a talent for writing sentimental twaddle and it makes him feel romantic and poetic, or something, to spread his sentiments over good white paper.

But these great-lover type of husbands are a pretty poor bet for life companions.

DEAR MISS DIX—We have a boy whom we adopted when he was three days old. Now he is six. Shall we tell him he is adopted? We love him very much and want to do what is best for him. MRS. C. R.

ANSWER—By all means tell him before he grows any older. At his age he will not understand what adoption means and think it an honor rather than otherwise, but if he grows up in the belief that you are his own parents and finds out later that he has been received, it will break him all up. Some sensitive children never get over it.

A good way to put it is to tell him that you looked all around for a little boy that you wanted until you found him, and that you liked him so much that you just took him for your own.

THE COOK'S CORNER

SUPER-HAMBURGERS

(This demonstrates our ability to make inexpensive meats taste like the most expensive cuts!)

In your most professional manner ask the butcher for 1 lb. ground round steak; you will also need 2 or 4 strips breakfast bacon. Now 1 lb. boneless meat should serve 4 people, so you can either divide this in two and use it another way for a following day or invite in company—or if your man is very meat hungry he might eat two portions. Form the meat into large cakes and wrap edge in 1 strip rindless bacon, and fasten with toothpick. Grease the broiler rack and broil the meat cakes at very high heat, turning over as soon as first side is well seared. You want them a little pink in the centre to be like filet mignons (the tenderloin from beef) —if they are 1 inch thick they will take about 10 minutes under hot broiler —turn them about four times. Salt and pepper during last minute.

MEAT-LOAF MIXTURE:

1 pound minced beef
2 cups soft bread crumbs
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion —raw or as removed from parboiled onions.
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
Few grains cayenne
1-2 teaspoon mixed poultry seasonings (optional).
1 egg-yolk.

Combine ingredients in order given, mixing lightly to prevent making the mixture too condensed. Pile lightly into cavities of parboiled and scooped-out onions for baking. When making meat loaf alone, raw onion may be used — otherwise it is natural to use onion removed from the centre of those which are to be stuffed.

BLAME THAT SICK HEADACHE ON YOUR LIVER

Headache is often Nature's warning the system is "backfiring" with impurities. A sluggish liver not producing enough liver bile is generally to blame.

Your liver must produce 1 to 2 pints of bile daily to help digest fatty foods, promote regularity. If it slows down, poisons accumulate. This leads to sick headaches, sour stomach, indigestion, biliousness, bad breath, a worn-out, half-sick feeling. The gentle, all-vegetable way to stimulate liver bile is with BILE BEANS.

"The Medicine That Copies Nature", Bile Beans contain 10 pure vegetable extracts which act on liver, stomach and kidneys ever so gently. These small liver pills do not gripe, nauseate or weaken like harsh purgatives. Mild, yet effective.

For a peppier, brighter tomorrow, try Bile Beans tonight. Prove for yourself their amazingly gentle action. Over 7 million boxes used last year, convincing evidence of how greatly they are helping others. 25

CHAPTER XXIII

As Tracy walked back toward the house with Jim, she kept thinking about the look that had come into Clinto Hanlon's eyes when she had feigned anxiety about him. Quite obviously, he had been encouraged to believe that she was more than a little interested in him.

Annoyed by this realization, she blamed Jim.

"You seem to have a special talent for making enemies," she said tartly. "You didn't have to talk that way to Clint."

"I did," he replied. "I mean to find out who's trying to get rid of me and I meant it when I implied that Hanlon might be involved."

"So you still think there's a plot against you?"

"What else? Not against me, but against the man I'm supposed to be."

"And you suspect the Garrisons —Ramon and Juan?"

"Naturally. They didn't want Phil Garrison to come here because they were afraid he would win the Senora's affections and do them out of what they expect from her when she dies. That's motive enough for hiring Jose to put a bullet through me."

"I think you're wrong," Tracy said. "Neither Ramon nor Juan could do anything so ugly. I'm sure that, if it was Jose who shot at you, he was acting on his own. He's wild by nature and he holds a grudge against you for getting the best of him last night."

Jim shrugged. "You're loyal to the Garrisons, and you don't want to think them capable of having a man murdered. Still, you must admit it's possible."

"But they're civilized people! It's true they didn't want Phil Garrison here, and they wanted me to influence the Senora against bringing him here, but murder—" Tracy broke off with a shudder.

Jim halted and faced her. "Here's another thing to think about. Haven't you wondered about the Senora's illness? I mean, don't you think it's odd that she suddenly became so ill—and then recovered so amazingly after my arrival?"

"Why, yes. . . ." Tracy looked at him doubtfully. "The doctor, too, seemed to think it surprising. But what do you mean?"

"I have reason to believe that something or some one frightened her while you were on your trip East—that she suffered a shock of some sort. I believe that fear was the cause of her illness. And I believe that she recovered after my arrival because she felt that I would protect her from whatever she feared."

Tracy's eyes widened. "Do—do you mean you think that the Garrisons did or said something that frightened her?"

"Possibly. In my talk with her this morning, I got the distinct impression that she was afraid and that that was one reason why she wanted me — the grandson she thinks I am — to stay on here. I also got the impression that she wanted to keep secret the reason for her fear. You have her confidence, Tracy. Perhaps you can find out the reason."

"I'll try, but I doubt whether I can. If she has made up her mind to keep it to herself, she will," Tracy paused, then asked, "Is this your reason for wanting to stay here despite the fact that your life is in danger—because you're concerned about the Senora?"

"One of my reasons," Jim smiled faintly. "That's hard for you to believe, isn't it? You keep thinking of me behind a door with a gun in my hand—and of my tricking you. You still think that I may have some ugly reason for being here, don't you?"

Tracy frowned. "No . . . but I think I know another reason why you stay," she said slowly. "There's Ruth. I say you kiss her there by the spring this morning. She—she's beautiful, isn't she?"

"Very beautiful."

Tracy felt a sudden stabbing hurt. She turned away, biting down hard on her under lip.

They walked on. As they approached the patio gateway of the new section of the house, they heard juke-box music coming from the rumpus room.

Entering the house, they found Ruth and Pete Donohue in the rumpus room. Tracy saw the sullen look that Pete cast at Jim. Plainly, he was still resentful of the rough treatment that Jim had given him in the hills that morning, shortly after the shooting.

Tracy walked over to him, smiled and suggested that they dance.

As he guided her about the floor, she whispered, "Take that scowl off your face, Pete. It's unbecoming. After all, if some one had taken a shot at you, you too would want to find out who did it."

"Sure—but this Phil Garrison is too high-handed," Pete growled.

"Like a hero in one of your stories."

"Yeah, only more so. But I suppose you admire the way he acted. He's got you all starry-eyed, and Ruth has found a new interest in life. The ranch was a pretty pleasant place before he came here, but now—well, do you mind, Tracy, if I just go on hating the sight of him?"

Meanwhile, Jim had seated himself beside Ruth on the sofa. She was leaning close to him, chattering gaily, but he scarcely heard what she said. He was thinking of Tracy—watching her as she danced with Pete. He felt stirred as he watched her — found himself thinking, "I could fall in love with her." But he wouldn't let himself fall in love with her. She was a part of the Garrison ranch, and he was awed by the Garrison ranch. He contrasted it with the shabby little house in a crowded city neighborhood where he had grown up. Tracy's background made her seem beyond his reach.

And Ruth Garrison? Of Ruth, he thought, "A man could forget her background — marry her despite it." She lacked Tracy's genuineness and, for this reason, he didn't feel the same scruples in regard to her.

She settled herself low on the sofa, slipped her hand into his.

"What's wrong with you tonight, darling?" she murmured plaintively. "You're so preoccupied. Aren't you going to pay just a wee bit of attention to me?"

Jim turned and looked at her. Something in her dark eyes told him that she had discovered his secret—that she knew now he was not her cousin. There was a challenge in the look she gave him. Now there was nothing to restrain her from doing her utmost to charm him.

A Job Only You Can Do

Price Control Questions

Control will appear in The Guardian as a regular feature each day The questions are those which have reached the Wartime Prices and Trade Board from housewives in this region. The answers are provided by the Board Readers. Persons who have intelligent questions to ask on price control are invited to send them in writing to the Women's Regional Advisory Committee of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

Q. Is my butcher within his rights in removing from my ration book meat coupons which become void and have not been spent?

A. No. Unspent coupons should be destroyed by the holder of the book. While void coupons are worthless to the consumer they are still valid for the retailer in purchasing replacement stock. Unless these are destroyed, retailers will be able to buy supplies which they do not need and the purpose of rationing will be defeated.

Q. We have a hired girl working on our farm weeding. She will be here for one meal each day for 13 weeks. Is there any way I can get extra rations for her?

A. Yes. Rural dwellers who engage temporary help may secure additional supplies of rationed commodities. You should apply for these extra rations at your Local Ration Board office stating (a) the specific nature of the extra work (b) the number of workers (c) the number of days they will be employed and (d) the number of meals to be served. Applications for less than 12 meals will not be considered.

Q. Why does the Wartime Prices and Trade Board want farmers to save horsehair?

A. Horsehair is not being used extensively in the manufacture of equipment for the armed forces. Only combings from the mane and tail can be put to use.

CHESTERFIELD COAT STILL FASHIONABLE

Coats measure up smartly to wartime standards of practicality and durability. Still of major importance will be Chesterfields, newest with raglan sleeves and spearhead embroidered trim, and in black. Their usual velvet trim is sometimes supplanted by fur collars and cuffs, adding warmth now that there's more winter walking to be done. Classic box coats, tailored to a "T," of the same spongy woolens or smooth striped and checked men's wear fabrics used in the suits with which they team effectively, also are scheduled to gain in popularity.

THE SECRET

Mrs. Lucy Sutton, 101, of Shenstone, England says the secret of long life is keeping warm. "I have a woollen vest, calico chemise, flannel petticoat and an underskirt," she said at her cottage on her birthday. "I wear them all the year round."

LINK WITH PAST

It is hard to [illegible] in these days of 400-miles-an-hour aircraft that there is a living link with the days of Lord Nelson. But there is —Mrs. Margaret Martin Atkins, of Wells Somerset, Eng. A dignified old lady, she sat straight in her chair, and told interviewers, "Yes, my father served with Nelson and fought in the Peninsular War with Wellington too." She was speaking of Gen. W. A. Johnson of the 32rd Cornwall Light Infantry, who was born in 1777. In Nelson's day army officers often served with the navy.

HER NINE JOBS

In the Surrey village of Bletchingly women with two or even three jobs just don't rate. The prize of them all is Mrs. Joyce Hart, who holds down nine, ranging from membership in the rural district council to the clerical work in her father's business. She also finds time to look after the baby son of her brother, missing in Tunisia.

SUITS ARE MUCH IN FASHION PICTURE

With pronounced stress on their year-round value, suits will carry the style torch high and will be worn with matching coats, at any time of day. First in demand is the tailleur, preferably fashioned of men's wear worsted highlighting stripes and modest checks in dark grey, browns, navy and black in the order named. Softer suits, with slightly bloused bodies, are developed in a range of gay colors, red topping the list. Velvet collars and pocket flaps often offer a pretty contrast to woolens of suede-like texture.

NEW COLOR RANGE IS GAY AND WIDE

A wide color choice is certain for the coming season. The primary reason for the lovely jewel tones is that they require less dye than established winter colors. Pastels rate unusual importance for the same reason. Shades of brown will take top billing, also, due to the fact that they blend with brown shoes, still permitted. Many hues of blue will [illegible]ding roles, too.

PLAY CLOT[illegible] "STAY-AT-HOMES"

Wartime restrictions on automobile and train may keep you from straying far from home the summer, but you'll still want costumes that can multiply into many different turnouts for exercise and play hours. You can make them yourself and if you've never tackled sewing before, you'll be wise to seek aid from your local centre experts in the latest short-cuts and dressmaker tricks. You can add to the importance of a pair of navy slacks by making a nautical-looking blouse of white duck and cuffs with narrow white braid. To complete the costume you could whip up a red cotton jerkin.

GARDENING APRON IS EASILY MADE

This summer you can look magnificent digging in your Victory garden if you make yourself one of the smart new aprons that are as practical as they are gay. Get about a yard and a half of heavy striped, bright-colored denim that can be washed frequently and leave the colors bright and gay. With denim costing about 35 cents a yard, you'll have an apron you'll be proud of without disturbing the budget a bit.

A strip about 33 inches wide will make the apron and belt. An additional strip 10 inches square is needed for the bib-front nad two narrow strips, each two inches wide and 22 inches long for the suspender straps.

Make the knee pad that measures 16 inches square of some waterproof fabric. Place over the bottom of the aparon so that it covers the front of the apron from knees down to the hem and attach the top edge of the pad to the apron with a slide fasener closing or colorful matching buttons. When're finished working with weeds and trowels, the pad can be removed easily.

A Morning Smile

A student pilot excitedly called the control tower: "Tower, I'm having trouble with my engine. It's missing What should I do?"

The tower radioed, "All ships clear the air, stand by for orders. Plane 123, are your wheels down?"

"Yes, but . . . "

"Can you make the field?"

"Well, I . . . "

"Think fast man, if you can't make the field try a ploughed pasture."

"Sir, but . . . "

"How's your gas feeding now?"

"Well, sir, my engine just quit."

"What's your position now, 123?"

"You see, sir, I haven't taken off. I'm still on the ramp."

RIVERDALE—CHURCHILL W. I.

The regular monthly meeting of Riverdale—Churchill Women's Institute was held on Tuesday night, July 6th, at the home of Mrs. Eric Ferguson, with seven members and several visitors in attendance. Meeting opened by singing Institute Ode and repeating Creed in unison. Roll call was responded by each member paying 10 [illegible] $1.00 was contributed to the [illegible] of the Institute by a friend. [illegible] cook books were ordered. Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Correspondence was [illegible] by Secretary.

Another Quilt was completed, sent to Red Cross, this being the eighth quilt to be sent to Red Cross. Mrs. Guy MacLeod and Mrs. [illegible] Ferguson were appointed as delegates to attend the annual convention at Charlottetown. Next meeting to be held at the home of Mrs. Oliver MacLeod. Roll Call, 15 cents. It was decided to hold a social meeting on Monday night, [illegible] 12th at the school, to make plans to hold a lawn party. A dainty lunch was served by hostess. Meeting closed by singing National Anthem.
