BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

JUMPER IS PEEVED
For good or ill some how or other
In some way each affects another.
—Old Mother Nature.

That is Old Mother Nature's way of saying that no one can live to and for himself alone, no matter how he may try. He may think that what he does has nothing to do with any one else, but he is mistaken.

Jumper the Hare had watched Lightfoot the Deer, Mrs. Lightfoot and the twins tramp out their yard in a certain good feeding place in the Green Forest and thought only that he was glad he didn't have to go all that trouble because of deep snow. You know Jumper is one of the few Green Forest folks who can get about on the snow instead of having to wade through it, or being unable to get around in it at all. His long hairy toes spread so that they are like snowshoes. They keep him from sinking too much. That is why many call him the Snowshoe Rabbit.

He often visited that yard for Mr. and Mrs. Lightfoot were old friends and long-time neighbors. That part of the Green Forest where they had made their yard had long been one of his favorite feeding grounds in winter. Then he too lives largely on low-growing shoots and tender twigs of various kinds of bushes and a little young trees. He also eats some bark just as Peter Rabbit does. He often saw his neighbors stand up on their hind feet and stretch up as far as they could for a mouthful of browse. They hadn't done this at first. There had been no need of it.

"Isn't much there for you, is there?" said Blacky.

But as winter dragged on and his friends were still prisoners in their own yard there was more and more standing up on their hind feet and reaching for food. They had already eaten all that grew low enough to be easily reached. Jumper didn't notice this until one day when he was visiting the yard he wanted a bite to eat. Just the tender tips of a twig or two was all he wanted. He tried one path after another and not a twig could he find within reach, not even when he stood up as high as he could on his long hind feet, and then he could reach pretty high. All had been browsed off. There wasn't a twig within his reach anywhere. It wasn't until he jumped out of a path up on the snow that he could find a bite, and then only beyond the reach of long necks. In that part of the yard, way everything within Jumper's reach that could be eaten had been eaten.

It really didn't matter to Jumper then because he could go about on the snow where he pleased, and so could get what he needed where the Deer couldn't go. Blacky the Crow happened to see him as he was leaving the Deer yard.

"Isn't much left there for you, is there?" said Blacky.

"I wonder what they will do next winter. They will have hard work to find as good as this if they have to make a yard then."

"Perhaps they will make it here again," said Jumper.

"What for? There would be nothing for them to eat here, or for you either for that matter," said Blacky.

"Why not?" demanded Jumper. His eyes had opened very wide. He looked surprised. He was surprised.

"Shoots and twigs of bushes and trees don't grow in a single summer like grass and other plants that come up every year. You ought to know that," said Blacky.

"Of course I know it. I just didn't think of it. Why—why this has always been my favorite part of the Green Forest in winter because there always has been plenty to eat here. Now it is spoiled! There won't be anything here for those Deer another winter, but there won't be anything for me either!" Jumper sounded peeved. He was peeved. What Blacky had said was true and there was nothing that could be done about it. Never before had it entered his head that what Lightfoot the Deer and his family did had concerned him in any way. He had been glad when they had made their yard there. Now he wished mightily that they hadn't.

AFTER THE OPENING LEAD

Anyone—experts or novice—is apt to go wrong on an opening lead, since oftentimes the selection must be made blindly. After the dummy is put down, however, a good player will "check up," and, if necessary, take remedial action. Consider this case:

South dealer. Both sides vulnerable.

♠ 5 2	♥ A 7 4	♦ 10 7 4	♣ 3
♥ 10 8 6 5	♠ N	♣ 3	♦ 2
♠ K J 5 4	♥ E	♠ A 8 7 2	♥ 8 4 3
♣ 3	♠ S	♣ 8 4 3	♠ 8 4 3
♠ 7 2	♥ Q 8 6	♠ K Q J 3	♣ 6
♣ 6	♠ A K J 5	♣ 6	♠ A K J 5

South	West	North	East
1♠	1♥	2♣	2♦
2♥	Pass	3♥	Pass
4♥	Dir. Pass	Pass	Pass

West selected the same lead that would probably be made by many experts—the spade ace. He intended to lay down the king also, and by that sequence announce to his partner the ability to ruff a third round of the suit.

Unfortunately for this idea, dummy turned up with only two spades, and this, of course, should have made West revise his plans. However, for some undisclosed reason, West decided to play the spade king also. He then shifted to a low diamond. East took the nine with the ace and returned a diamond—but South was now in an excellent position. He ruffed with the heart three, cashed his own top hearts, and then went to dummy with a club, thus drawing the dummy. While he was thus drawing West's last trump he discarded a spade from his own hand, and could then claim the balance with solid clubs and the spade queen. West should have shifted immediately to a diamond, instead of cashing his second spade trick. True, by guessing correctly, South could drive out West's spade king and establish his own queen, but meanwhile the defenders could "pump" South twice in diamonds, and by thus shortening his trumps, fortify West's trump holding so that it would be sure to produce the setting trick.
