THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANE PHELPS

Chapter 116

It sounds terribly heartless but when the story upon which Dick and Juanita had spent weeks of work was returned by no less than five editors I could not help feeling glad, although I took great pains not to show it. In fact I was most sympathetic.

It had a peculiar effect upon Dick. The rejection of any work invariably depressed him for a time but this time down seemed to dishearten him altogether. One editor had said the plot was a "good one," but the treatment childish, uninteresting, ordinary. It was the same editor who had thought the previous story, which in a way accounted for Dick's disappointment.

"Do cheer up, Dick! You can't expect to write successes all the time I tried to encourage. He had been either very silent, or cross as could be for days past. "You have not spoken a pleasant word to me since that story came back. Don't take it so to heart."

"I guess I am pretty much of a grouch, Nan. But I somehow felt so sure Haggood would take it. He spoke so very flatteringly in his letter about the other one." Haggood was the name of the editor who had taken Dick's serious story.

"You wrote that alone." I could not help the reminder. "I know!—and Nan, I guess I shall have to write alone. It worries me to have to tell Juanita so. Especially since she has given me several ideas that I am sure I can work up."

Dick went over to Juanita's soon after our talk. He came back smiling. "Well?" I asked, wondering. "She was a brick. When I told her that I would have to work out my ideas in my own way, that I could not collaborate, she was a bully. Offered to help me in any way she could, and even said she would edit herself permanently if necessary to my success."

I could not help thinking how simple Dick was. He repeated things Juanita said to him with all the naïveté of a child. Yet I knew she still held a strong attraction for him one not easily to be broken.

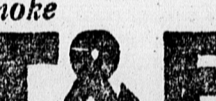

At times it seemed as if my punishment for what I had done in those past years was more than I could bear—even more than I deserved. I married him, full of life and fun. Honest, faithful. Then I would think of him as he was when we left New York—broken old, ready willing to pass out by his own hand because of the ruin of his own life.

The ruin I had wrought. It was during such reminiscing that I felt no punishment was undeserved, no sacrifice too great for him. I was doing remarkably well in my work. I now had sizable bank account and often refused to contract for homes that would take me away from Dick, although he was so busy writing (and spending his leisure hours with Juanita) that I am not at all sure he would have missed me here. I had a capable maid, and Junior was doing well in school. Had Dick loved me—or had I been able to believe he did, I should have been perfectly happy.

One day we had a talk about our finances. He had insisted upon running the house, et cetera. He was making money now—had sold two stories since he refused to work with Juanita—and he declared I had done my share while he was getting "whipped into harness."

"But, Dick, I want to keep on," I pleaded. "You see, dear, it is a woman's place to keep the home. But I do not take that attitude. I feel that so long as the wife herself could keep it, if she can earn money at something more congenial it should be her privilege to use part of what she earns to do herself."

We finally compromised. Dick was to pay the interest on the mortgage, and buy all the food. I would pay for the maid, and the various improvements, et cetera. It was an equitable division, and I was very happy over it. Then too it made Dick feel better. I had realized that he often felt belittled because of the necessity for using my earnings, and that he sometimes might have been a bit hurt because I earned more than he did. This settlement would prevent anything of the sort.

"What about Junior?" Dick had asked. Up to this time I had paid all his bills. "No! I will pay his tuition and dress him. You may give him his spending money, but don't spoil him."

"I won't!" I promised, but immediately commenced planning what I would do to make him happy; to give him all that other boys of his age had, much of which had been necessarily denied him.

MR. J. D. STEWART'S SPEECH ON THE ADDRESS

Another Merciless Exposure of Broken Pre Election Promises and a Searching Analysis of Government Activities Including Suppression of Minority Report.

In the Legislative Assembly on Thursday evening, March 17, Mr. J. D. Stewart, member for Georgetown, delivered the following address:

I have listened to the rather lengthy debate which has occupied the attention of this House for nearly a week now, and had about come to the conclusion that it would not be necessary for me to add anything to it. I had reached this decision the more readily because, as the debate developed—and after listening to the hon. gentlemen across the floor it seemed that more and more it was developing into a mutual admiration society—and as the bouquets were being faster and faster from time to time, it would have been a pity for me to have thrown in a discordant note. But as my hon. friend the Attorney-General has asked to hear from me it would be a pity to disappoint him.

I cannot do better, to begin with, than follow the old established custom of paying my tribute of congratulation to the mover and seconder of the resolution. I appreciate the fact that it is a very difficult and onerous task; and I remember four years ago when that task was imposed upon myself with what fear and trembling I approached it, and how, after I had finished, it seemed as if a great burden had been rolled off my mind. I desire therefore, to compliment both of the gentlemen upon the able manner in which they have performed their respective tasks.

As has been said however, in so far as the mover of the resolution is concerned, we expected great things from him. We have all been accustomed to listen to the eloquent, musical way in which he has dealt with various public problems. If I might make one mild criticism it would be that he did not stick very closely to the text on this occasion. But I would be inclined to put the blame for this on the text itself rather than on the speaker.—There was not much said matter in it, dear Sir, and consequently he went further afield for a subject which could be handled properly and intelligently.

With regard to the Speech from the Throne. I really do not want to say very much about the composition of that document. But I must say this, that in all serious times it is a great pity to my mind that an important public document which is to be engrossed on the records of this Province and which will form a part of those records for all time to come, should be prepared and set out in ungrammatical, awkward, clumsy English. It is unworthy of the gentlemen who we must suppose produced it. The hon. member for the Attorney-General, with all his faults—and we on this side believe them to be many—is a master of choice English. In his public utterances and in his compositions, in diction and choice of language he leaves nothing to be desired. He might almost be said of his distinguished first lieutenant, the Attorney-General. Why these gentlemen, with the ability they possess, should have permitted such a thing as this I cannot understand.

The document has a very valedictorian tone about it. It contains no promises for the future, and seems to have been composed by parties short on the earth. I am not surprised that in nearly all the speeches that have come from the government benches there is noticeable a sliding away from the matters mentioned in the document; but it seems to me also that the speakers have been almost unfortunately in their choice of outside subjects as if they had stuck to their text.

I remember, two or three years ago, the Attorney General on occasion took me to task for "cocking my head to one side and lecturing the House." If during what I am about to say, my head is not at the proper angle, he will correct me. I will endeavor to correct the fault.

I think it is a great pity that the Legislative Assembly of this Province—men who have been elected to legislate in the interests of the Province and who meet here once a year for the transaction of that business—should be spending perhaps one-third of each session in criticizing and abusing a certain branch of the public press of the Province. It seems to me that they should be able to find something better to do. And the criticism after all shows that that press has been at work—it has been attempting to correct certain diseases in the body politic and that treatment has evidently hurt someone. There was a sting in it! I think it was unfair, ungentlemanly, that on the floor of this House an attack should have been made on a newspaper not represented within the bar of this House and unable to say anything in its own defense. I was under the impression that the hon. member for Belfast (Hon. F. Nash) should undertake on the floor of this House to make any reference to any other newspaper in this Province which is his opponent commercially, politically and otherwise. I was much taken with that part of his speech which dwelt on the position and importance of the press as an institution; but when he reached the end of that part of his address he should have stopped. And I think it would have been very much more to his credit had he done so.

As to the Speech from the Throne, perhaps I cannot do better than take up the different matters in the order they occur.

"Our gallant returned soldiers are being rapidly and successfully re-established in civil life." I do not think it is necessary to say much on this subject. The Government has taken a great deal of credit for exempting returned soldiers from taxes. In so far as they are responsible for that anyone will give them credit. But the land purchased, through the Soldiers' Settlement Board in this case was not taxable anyway; and so far as the other exemptions are concerned they were not in the Bill as introduced, but were suggested by the Leader of the Opposition when the Bill was in committee, and the Bill was amended accordingly on his suggestion.

"During the year 1920 a satisfactory beginning was made in the improvements of the highways in accordance with a programme approved by the Federal Government." Now, one would judge from the speeches made by the gentlemen on the Government benches that the project was formulated and completely financed this Highway project. Why, the Commissioner of Public Works has been lauded to the skies as being one of the greatest benefactors of the country as the head of this scheme. As a matter of fact, the people of this Province are aware that the project was formulated by the Dominion Government and is being taken advantage of in every province in Canada. The plans were made before this government came into power and were prepared by the present Leader of the Opposition. This government did what had been forced upon them; and in this, as in everything else, they are insincere. Will they not do away with that salary scheme during the last campaign? It was pointed out in flagrant headlines that this highway would if carried out ruin the Province and place an unbearable burden of taxation on the people.

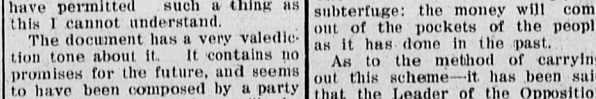

But they say: "We have invented a new method of raising the 60 per cent necessary to finance this project. We will refund the automobile taxes and borrow on the strength of that and so take care of this indebtedness." And so they lead the people to believe that the work will not cost them anything. The automobile tax was in existence before this Government came in, and if they take it away from the revenue they will leave a shortage that must be supplied from some other source. And if conditions occur which some people think they foresee—if stringent times come upon us again—then we can very well understand that the prophecy of the hon. member for New Perth will be fulfilled, and that in the coming years we may not have nearly as many automobiles as now. And where will this tax be then? That part of our revenue will shrink as the number of automobiles become less and yet the monies borrowed are a charge on our general revenues. The "new method" is simply a subterfuge; the money will come out of the pockets of the people as it has done in the past.

As to the method of carrying out this scheme—it has been said that the Leader of the Opposition has committed himself to a scheme of permanent roads which is impracticable. Now, what is a permanent road? There is no such thing as absolute permanency. If I understand the policy of my hon. friend, it is that the low-lying roads should receive attention first and should be gravelled. There seems to be a great lack of unanimity on the other side of the House as to this. We gather from the Commissioner of Agriculture and others that dirt roads were the most serviceable, whereas the hon. member for West River (Mr. LePage)—and he uses the word WE in large capitals, as an important member of the government whose words should carry weight—says that some of the roads would be gravelled next summer. Now, what is the Government's policy in accepting the policy of the Leader of the Opposition after all. The hon. member from Prince County (Mr. Methers) says that last year they put a road over some swamp in his district which from his description reminded me of the bottomless pit. To bridge such a place it must needs be permanent—but even that road will not save the Government from getting into the pit, and that very soon! A great many bouquets have been thrown to the Commissioner of Public Works for the manner in which he is carrying out this road scheme, but it is too soon yet to start boasting. Nothing has been tried out yet. We have not access yet to the public accounts, and I do not know what the cost of these roads have been. We haven't been allowed even a "peep." But if the expenditure is as great as it would appear, and if the remainder of the public roads of this Province are to be neglected—as they have been—to facilitate the carrying out of this scheme, then it is a great question whether the expenditure will be justified. If these roads will require in the future the same amount of upkeep as ordinary roads, then I say the expenditure will NOT be justified. But if any credit is due to anybody in the matter, then it is due to one whom these gentlemen when in opposition in 1919 tried to deal with in a very peculiar manner. If the hon. gentlemen will refer to the journals of the House for that year they will find that when the estimate was being laid out through and when a motion was proposed that they be adopted an amendment was proposed by the present Leader of the Government "that it be referred back to the committee to cut out the $2,400 salary of the Government engineer." They proposed this measure and kept the House sitting almost till daylight in order that they might do away with that salary. But they have wisely kept that engine forward an inch without him. They talk about the Commissioner of Public Works having earned an increase of salary—it is the engineer who deserves the increase, if credit is due to the man who really did the work.

THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC WORKS—Hear, hear!

MR. STEWART—I hope then, he will see to it by giving the gentleman the money who really earned it, instead of keeping it himself.

"The subject of Education is all important and all absorbing. We have heard a good deal about this important subject; the Speech is very boastful on it. The Government claims to have made advances along the lines of education. My hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition has spoken of the necessity of greater efficiency among our teachers and of increasing efforts in normal training. We all agree with him here. But it seems to me that sympathy of this kind comes with bad grace from a number of gentlemen who have been instrumental in closing for weeks the only institution in this Province which we have for training those teachers. A condition of affairs has occurred in this Province more disgraceful than anything preceding it. For what cause we do not know, we had that College closed for weeks and the whole year spoiled to the students. I have cause to know, for I had a pupil there myself. But it means very little to me in comparison with those in outside parts of the Province who had to sacrifice in order that they might send some of their children there to be educated and fit them to be self-sustaining. The whole year's work has been ruined to them. On account of that loss of time, that disjuncting of the work of the institution they will not be in the same class as all as pupils of previous years. And though the Government has been challenged to give an explanation of this matter no such explanation has been forthcoming. Was the problem too difficult of solution? The Leader of the Government expresses the desire to hear the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition upon the matter. If he were not able to grapple with it the proper course would have been to give up the reins of government and let some other person handle it.

We have heard much of the boasted general improvements in public schools, and of the increase to the teachers' salaries. Yet in 1911, when the Liberals went out of power, the public schools were at their lowest ebb in the Province, and the incoming Conservatives grappled with the problem more successfully than this government has succeeded in doing up to the present time and that with power, the public schools were at their lowest ebb in the Province.
