New Butter Wrap Keeps Product In Better Condition

The Bacteriology and Dairy Research Division, Science Service, of the Dominion Department of Agriculture has conducted exhaustive tests with Aluminum Foil butter wraps. The results of these tests indicate that butter reaches Canadian tables in better condition when wrapped in Aluminum Foil.

Color is better. Moisture loss is reduced. Foreign flavors are not absorbed. The flavor score is higher.

After months of study and research Central Creameries Ltd., one of the oldest established butter producers in Canada, has adopted this revolutionary wrap.

This decision to adopt Aluminum Foil will not only bring better butter to Island homemakers but will allow Prince Edward Island butter to travel with that fresh churned flavor to distant markets.

Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

"What to your mind has been the best happening of today?" we inquired of Jamie, when prayers past this evening, he was snug in bed. He stopped a moment to consider the query then repeated our words slowly: "What was the best happening of today? Well perhaps you mightn't think it—but for me it was the coming of Tippy's pups. You see," he continued, "I'm pretty well used to calves and lambs and kittens by now, but I've never seen new pups before today. Just think of it—seven of them! It's wonderful, don't you think so?"

"Wonderful!" we agreed, "in fact it's nothing short of remarkable." And when he had "cuddled down" in his pillow, and his voice was sleep-laden it was to talk of them still, to wonder if a person were allowed to pick of them, which would it be—the one that was black as night? or a mate, with a fetching white vest? Or would one of those spotted ones turn out to be the prettiest and best of them all?

It was a perplexing question to ponder over, especially to a lad like Jamie, whose favored friend since his toddling days has been the Mutt-dog. "That hound of yours is fairly useless," we overheard James remark to his namesake after Pard has done a brilliant piece of work in rounding up the cows. "Why, he won't look at a cow!"

And who is Tippy? She is grand-daughter's property, a small short-haired creature, of a brownish

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Parental Matchmakers

Education Good Preparation For Successful Marriage

DEAR MISS DIX: I am a girl 19 years old. Have finished high school and want to go to college and after that to build up a business career. But my family object very much. They wish me to get married and have even picked out my husband, but I don't want to get married yet. I haven't seen enough of life. Also, I want to earn my own living for a while at least. Would you advise me to follow my own desires, or take the advice of my family?

UNDECIDED

ANSWER: If you marry a man you don't love just to please your family and because they have the old-fashioned idea that marriage is the only career a girl should follow, you will be a miserable, discontented woman as long as you live.

Marriage is hard on a woman and full of sacrifices that she must make, even when she marries a man she loves and when it is the thing on earth she most desires, but it is almost unendurable when she marries a man she does not care for and when she goes into it against her will. The parents who think that they can find security for their daughter in a forced marriage have not reckoned with the modern woman. Nine times out of ten she endures its misery and discontent for a few years and then gets a divorce.

Whether your parents send you to college or not, they, at least, owe it to you to give you a training for some occupation by which you will be made self-sustaining.

That is your due whether they marry you or not. For marriage does not solve the problem of a girl's future. Sometimes husbands die. Sometimes they become invalids. Sometimes they lose their jobs. And often a woman after marriage has far more need of some way of making money than she had before.

Also, there is no better preparation for marriage than for a girl to have a thorough business training. It disciplines her. It teaches her self-control, promptness, efficiency and the value of a dollar, all of which fit her to be a better wife, housekeeper and mother.

DOROTHY DIX

DEAR MISS DIX: How can I cure myself of being suspicious of my wife? The reason I feel this way is because one night she and a woman friend, under the pretense of going to a show, motored with two young men to a hotel out of the city for a glass of beer. I found out through the lie she told me when she came back, and since then I always think the worst of everything she does. The worry over this is not increasing my earning capacity as a father and sometimes I feel like sending the whole affair to the devil and buying myself a one-way ticket to Mexico.

FRANK

ANSWER: When once our faith has been shaken in a person it is very hard to restore it, and the best you can do for yourself is to keep your thoughts firmly fixed upon your wife's good qualities, and say, like Dr. Coue, that every day in every way you believe her truer and truer.

But it doesn't seem to me that motoring with three friends to another town for a glass of beer was such a heinous offense. Probably ninety-nine married women out of a hundred have gone on an innocent little lark like that, for women are human after all and like a little harmless fling every now and then, and there is nothing for their husbands to get green-eyed over about it. The little slipping of the yoke made them better and more contented wives.

When husbands and wives have to lie to each other and sneak off for an evening out, the blame should be laid on the wife or husband whose tyranny has enslaved them and deprived them of all freedom.

If you had not denied your wife all liberty and most pleasures, she would have been glad to have told you frankly about what she did.

I think you are making a mountain out of a molehill and the wise thing for you to do is to forget it. I wonder if you have never stepped out of an evening with a girl.

DOROTHY DIX

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: What do you think of the modern system of courting? Most of the girls are ready to be hugged and kissed the

Hobbies Of Local Citizens

By Uncle Joe

White wings unfurled in the breeze—soft winds, blue skies and dancing waves that keep perfect time with the speed of a sailboat. What could be a prettier sight! Whether you are out to capture a trophy or merely for the love of it, you can get a great thrill out of a sailing boat.

Sailing is again coming back into its own, and this summer there will be many thousands of boys and girls sailing—and racing—their own boats in Canada and the U. S. A.

Sailing has been called the fastest sport in the New World since the closing of World War II. Lloyd's Register of American Yachts lists about 750 clubs in Canada and the United States with over 100,000 boats ready to shake out their mainsails. To these figures might be added scores of others that are privately owned and not listed at all.

There are few hobbies that offer such a thrill as boat sailing. I don't think so, ask any young sailor, or any old one for that matter, and they'll tell you that it's tops in sport.

If you are fortunate enough to possess a cat-rigged dinghy the whole family can enjoy the outing. There are many types of boats, however. When it comes time to choose, most young sailors prefer Snipes, Lightnings, Woodpusses or Comets, as none of these is too hard to learn to sail.

Once upon a time, the rivers and harbors of our country boasted many sailing ships, and a prettier sight would be hard to see, their white sails glistening beneath the rays of the sun.

So many of our local citizens find recreation in this sport that I am not going to single out any one individual but will treat this class of hobbyists as a unit.

When I queried one hobbyist recently about this sport and the best types of boats to use, he quickly retorted, "There are no best boats, but there are plenty of good boats. But—and there is a 'but'—you should know the type best suited to your requirements and the ones that are popular in your sailing community. Then you'll have a craft that is suitable for local conditions." Sport will also be a source of plenty of competition, should you decide to take up racing.

Another hobbyist I talked with had this to say: "Learning to sail is easy; yet it's a game in which you never stop learning. I've known beginners who became quite proficient after a few weeks of practice—but it is within reasonable limitations—but most of us old-timers know we haven't yet reached the end of sailing knowledge."

Perhaps that accounts for the fascination of the sport and helps make it so popular with old and young.

"What about safety measures?" I questioned my last informant. "What if a boat should capsize and throw its occupant into the water?"

"I'm glad you asked that question," he said, "for it's a very important one. A non-sinkable boat is best for beginners, as this type of boat will stay afloat after being capsized. The beginner is bound to get a few duckings, but he will be able to hang on to the boat until somebody comes to his rescue."

"Sailing a boat is much like learning to ride a bicycle. You get a few tumbles but soon acquire an instinctive sense of balance which makes riding easy and loads of fun."

"Good grief," said the city slicker. "Why did they put the depot so far from the town?"

"I dunno," said the local yokel, "unless they wanted to get the depot just as close as possible to the railroad."

The doctor was very pleased with his patient's progress. "You're coughing more freely this morning."

Impatient patient: "Well, for gosh sakes, I ought to be. I've been practicing all night."

Living & Leisure

THE WOMAN'S REALM

THE LOST ASSET

He took care of his money, for money is wealth. But never once thought to take care of his health. His bank account thrived, since he made sure of that. But he never once thought he was growing too fat.

The future, he knew, would have gray in the skies. To be ready for rainfall a man must be wise. So to stack up the dollars he ceaselessly slaved. Forgetting entirely that strength can be saved.

He did without sleep for the fortune desired. Forced himself to keep on when his body had tired. But he got little comfort from all of his wealth. When he failed to obtain it he'd squandered his health.

—Edgar A. Guest.

Save old newspapers to make "logs" to burn in your fireplace on chilly summer evenings. Twist the paper into firm compact pieces and stow away in empty boxes, then use them as needed to cheer a living room. They give a good blaze and a surprising amount of heat.

When frosting little cakes, spear them with an ordinary kitchen fork. You can turn them quickly and twist them around as you frost the top and sides. No sticky fingers or broken cakes.

Nutmeg butter spread on warm coffee cake hits the spot. Rice custard with a nutmeg flavor is something special. And before whipping heavy cream or evaporated milk, add a little nutmeg to taste.

When you're away from home, the house plants are apt to droop and pine without their usual daily care. But there's a way to avoid letting down your indoor blooms without calling in the neighbors to do the watering. Let bricks take care of the plants.

That Body Of Yours

VITAMIN C PREVENTS HEAT EXHAUSTION

During hot weather, it is now the custom in many factories to have tablets containing about a quarter teaspoonful of table salt beside the water tap or cooler, and workers are advised to take a tablet every time they take a drink of water. It is loss of salt from the tissues that causes heat cramps and heat prostration or exhaustion.

Notwithstanding the fact that salt tablets have for years been used to prevent heat prostration in very hot climates, there are still some prostrations among workers under heat exposure. Accordingly Dr. W. L. Weaver, Richmond Virginia, reports in "Southern Medical Journal" the great success of vitamin C in preventing heat prostration in a cellulose factory. It became necessary to repair the ventilating system in one large room with a temperature from 85 to 100 F., with 50 per cent humidity while 42 workers were employed. Maintenance workers were brought in to repair the pipes and ducts located near the ceiling. The maintenance group was given 100 mg. vitamin C daily and the regular workers, serving as controls, received no vitamin C. However both the maintenance workers and the employees were given 7 grains of table salt and 3 grains of dextrose (sugar) hourly.

1. What is wrong with this sentence? "I do not propose to accept their offer." 2. What is the correct pronunciation of "persuasive"? 3. Which one of these words is misspelled? Cauterize, temporize, revivize. 4. What does the word "extol" mean? 5. What is a word beginning with d that means "accasioning doubt"?

ANSWERS
1. Say, "I do not intend to accept their offer." 2. Pronounce per-swa-siv, a as in say, both s's as in so; not per-swa-ziv. 3. Revivize. 4. To elevate by praise. The book extolled Lincoln's many virtues." 5. Dubious.

The maintenance workers averaged about nine years older than the control group and the maintenance workers performed harder physical labor. Because ventilation was not good during repairs both the temperature was 105 F. and the highest humidity 84 per cent. Since the maintenance group was working next to the ceiling they were exposed to temperatures from 100 to 120 F.
