THE NORTHERN RAVEN

This sombre bird, with the dismal voice, is not mentioned in Bain's "Birds of P. E. Island," 1891. Twenty-five years later, it was believed to be resident and breeding in this Province. My own observation leads me to believe that it is usually a very shy bird, and retires before the encroachments of civilization.

The Raven and the American Crow are alike in plumage, but differ in size, the Raven being about half as large again. But size, says Dr. Taverner, "is always an uncertain criterion in the wide open spaces, and the voice is the most certain guide." The Raven's note is a hoarse caw-caw which is different from the caw of the crow. If one can get near enough to see them, the "bib" of pointed feathers at its throat, marks the bird as the Raven.

Ravens are found from Alaska to Greenland, and winter southward to the mountains in northern Georgia. A young Raven captured in that State was kept for a year, and would eat nothing but animal matter, all kinds of vegetables being consistently refused. Ravens, like Crows, have a bad reputation for nest-robbing. In flight the Raven moves its wings with heavy flapping, but at times soars or sails along without apparent effort.

Something to search for

If I had preserved all the four-leaved clovers that have been brought in, I suppose I should have from 150 to 200; for they've been coming in for 10 years. If, however, you wish to have something really scarce and good, look out for the "Peloria" freak of the common Butter-and-Eggs, sometimes known as the Yellow Snap-dragon (Linnaeus vulgaris). The ordinary form of this Linaria is a persistent weed in waste places, roadsides, meadows, and crops. It has several times come across the Peloria form of its flowers in England, but never in this country. The Peloria flower has 5 spurs instead of one, and the mouth is circular instead of lobate. (There is a European species of Linaria, L. salicifolia, which has 5 spurs, but it is not found in this country.) Our common Daisy (Chrysanthemum) is also found in Britain, where it often produces abnormal flowers of different kinds. It flowers confined to the one type on P. E. Island. It has been my observation that the Daisy and the "Butter-and-Eggs" only produce freaks when grown in rich soil, while the clover producer abnormal leaves most frequently in wet seasons.

A Philosopher's Views (1).

There has just come to hand the address of Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, delivered before the World Assembly of the Churches at Amsterdam. It is a review of the present plight of mankind, and presents in the manner in which it has been brought about. The social systems of modern times, said Dr. Niebuhr, had been built on two dangerous illusions. In brief these are: (1) The idea that one can achieve some sort of stability by balancing competing self-interests of individuals within the community; and (2) That the main trouble in human life is ignorance and lack of opportunity. The vanity of the first idea is proved by the ill-balance of power between the groups and the increasing destruction of true community. The second idea, viz., that all one need do is to free men from economic slavery, and "give them their chance", has contributed to our further disillusionment. We have not found stability by balancing competing self-interests and men are not redeemed in their human nature by education and opportunity. The systems built on these ideas fail because they do not reckon on the selfishness of all men. The rest, we see, is that we have built up our society on these principles (which deny the Gospel) and lie open to attack from those who see through our illusions (however much they are victims of illusions themselves). Communism has spread because it could point out the futility of trying to create a solidarity of the people by the precarious balancing of economic interests. "Its more drastic alternative" has drawn into the Communist net millions of people in the East. There are two other dangers. One is the danger of believing that all we need do is to save ourselves from Communism, and to safeguard whatever is undoubtedly precious in our civilization. (Though that civilization has been built in recent years on great errors, it is permeated by Christian influences, and has preserved, however feebly, the witness of the Christian faith.) This attitude ignores the cruelties and evils of Communism, have given our people a good pretext for not repenting of their own sins, but of calling attention to the evils of their opponents. There is the other danger of merely deploring that the nations have abandoned Christian standards and then retiring from all responsibility washing our hands of the whole matter, so to speak. This attitude forgets that it is this selfishness (which we share) that has created this secular world around us. "We are seeing what the Crow and the Raven prophesies when it tries to handle large-scale human affairs. We are looking at a mirror in which the rebellious part of us is revealed."

The Sky in October

Now that the nights close in earlier the stary firmament assumes a more cheerful nature, propitious when it tries to handle large-scale human affairs. We are looking at a mirror in which the rebellious part of us is revealed. Such is the beginning of Dr. Niebuhr's discourse, condensed a little to suit this column, but deserving of careful study in these perilous times. Readers will note that it is in general terms. In the next instalment Dr. Niebuhr is more specific.

Guests we had as well, who in a changed era of living could say "I have not only myself and family." "Certainly we were in Church this morning." "Every one?" "Yes, every one." Some with lads of fellows growing now into their teens, we envied their rare privilege of being guarded and guided and trusted that their parents we need not look too far ahead to a distant day to enjoy their youngsters, but now, in the delightful days when their world is all at hand, and each young one presents fresh delights and often — in the light of experience — amusing problems.

Conjunction of Jupiter and the Moon

Conjunction of Jupiter and the Moon on Oct. 27th. And finally Moon in its First Quarter, Oct. 28th. Jupiter Pluvius. The Romans were a realistic people, and when they surmised the planet "Pluvius" or Rainy, they did not do so without cause. My theory is that they found the conjunction of Jupiter and Luna (the Moon) brought rain. My Astronomer friends deny this, but here are the dates of conjunction this year: Jan. 27, (Rain on 28th); Feb. 23, (Rain on 23rd); March 23, (23rd); April 19, (19); May 17, (18); June 13, (13); July 10, (10); Aug. 6, (7); Sept. 2, (1). Sometimes there was merely a shower, and in some cases a mist of dampness hung above the pond at twilight, and James came from his last choring comments in regard to it "It doesn't seem as though we're ever going to get at the rest of this day we tell him."

No Change In American Atomic, Foreign Policy

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER WASHINGTON, Sept. 23 (AP)—The United States has lost its monopoly on atomic weapons but is still four years ahead of the Russians. State Department officials generally look the line that they did not believe the danger of war is either increased or decreased by the evidence that Russia has made at least one atomic bomb. Some diplomats, in fact, speculated that Russia, having ended much of the disparity between herself and the United States. Another point on which responsible informants would offer no comment was how the United States obtained possession of the evidence of the atomic explosion. The President's top advisors, it was learned, however, consider the evidence conclusive. At a minimum it shows that Russia has manufactured a quantity of atomic material sufficient to create a considerable explosion and that the Soviets therefore know how to make the materials. At a maximum, it indicates that the Soviets have manufactured an atomic bomb capable of being dropped on a target and that they deliberately set it off for test purposes. The experts reason that it is unlikely that the Russians have accumulated a stockpile of atomic material or that they have made much more than one bomb. They also believe the Russians have been helped greatly in their atomic manufacture by German scientists.
