Students Should See Well

Every pupil whose studies require the daily use of his eyes for close work should learn if he strains his eyes. This is much more than a question of eye welfare.

What Every Widow Knows!

By LUCILLE VAN SLYKE

CHAPTER LIX MOON MONEY

It took Molly less than two hours to get back to town but to her excited fancy it seemed like ages. She no longer tried to pretend to herself that she did not love Dexter. The love that she bore him was not the mad youthful passion that Kerry had died in battle.

"Drive back, course—no, wait!"—she was like a bewildered child. She fled up the steps, calling to Lilla, who was opening the door. "How is he?" "No use running," said Lilla, not unkindly. "There's a nurse here now and another doctor and they've done all they can—over him."

can help. Might take us hours to find just the person. We have to take tests." "All right, come on," she said briefly. "I've a car out here. We'll go wherever you say," she was conscious of assuming that already the Rogers' car and the Rogers' money was hers—but those splendid tools were at hand and she breathed a long sigh of delight in this queer new power.

"I think he's stopped breathing already," Molly half whispered. "I listened and listened while I stood there—but I couldn't hear him and couldn't see, and he was—oh, why didn't they think of getting somebody before I came!" she wailed petulantly. "So stupid of all of you to let him die."
